27,000 GAME FISH PLACED IN BAYOUS AND PONDS, IS SAID

F. L. Cox, Conservation Agent, Warns Against Taking Undersized Specimens

SALE OF CATCH IS ALSO AGAINST LAW OF STATE

Approximately 27,000 game fish have been turned into Bayou DeSiard and private fish ponds during the last month, F. L. Cox, state conservation agent, said yesterday in issuing a public warning against fishermen keeping undersize fish.

"There is a regular 'fish racket' going on around here," he said, "and I intend to stop it. Reports are coming in of catches beyond the limit set by law. I have been lenient and have been conducting a campaign of education against law violation for the past three months. Now I am asking the public to observe the laws, and I intend to enforce them."

Mr. Cox also pointed out that persons buying game fish were violators of the law, and said that hereafter purchasers will be prosecuted with those who trapped the fish.

"I appeal to the public to help conserve our fish supply," he said. "Many Monroe and West Monroe persons who call themselves good citizens are purchasing fish which were caught illegally. I have their names and car license numbers by the dozen, and I want them to stop it before prosecution becomes necessary. This racket is going to be ended."

Mr. Cox announced that more than 100 arrests for violation of the conservation laws had been made in the past year, saying, "I could fill the jails tomorrow if I arrested every violator I have checked up on."

Sid Joyner of Monroe was arrested yesterday on a charge of taking fish illegally and selling them to Twin Cities citizens. Four charges were filed against him, Mr. Cox said, and he was released on a $250 bond. His trial will be held next Friday.

Work of salvaging fish in Black Bayou in West Monroe will start Tuesday, Mr. Cox said, estimating that from 10,000 to 15,000 fish will be removed from ditches and pools where they were trapped when the water was lowered by removing the fill beneath the Illinois Central railroad tracks. These fish will be placed in Bayou DeSiard and private ponds, he said.

BRAGGING RUM RUNNER IS SOUGHT BY POLICE IN LINDBERGH'S CASE

HOPEWELL, N. J., May 21 (AP)—The Lindbergh murder investigation turned tonight into a concerted hunt for a Jersey rum-runner, who, two days before the famous baby's body was found, told how the infant had been killed and where the battered little form had been hidden.

There is a possibility this unnamed character may hold the key to the secret of what is already one of the world's strangest crime mysteries.

He has boasted, it was disclosed today, that he knows several of the band who perpetrated the fiendish kidnaping and killing.

As new light was thrown on this "mysterious gangster," now sought throughout the east, John Hughes Curtis, "hoax negotiator," conferred in his jail cell at Flemington with an attorney ,and "Jafsie," the ransom-payer, went dashing through New England on an unexplained mission.

CATHOLIC ORDER BEGINS ANNUAL SESSIONS TODAY

T. H. McMillan, B. J. Renaud and L. H. Krogmire are in Baton Rouge today attending the annual convention of the Knights of Columbus which meets today and tomorrow.

Efforts are to be exerted to secure the 1933 convention for Monroe. This will work the twenty-fifth anniversary of the council's establishment here and will be a notable event when combined with the holding of the state convention.

CALIFORNIAN FRUITS TO BE SOLD IN FLORIDA MARKETS

TAMPA, Fla., May 21 (AP)—California citrus fruit will be offered for sale in Florida within the next week, it was learned today from a local produce dealer.

It will be the first time in 15 years, Florida citrus exchange officials said, that California fruit has been allowed within the borders of Florida. A ruling of the state plant board had provided an effective barrier, but the ruling was modified recently. It now permits importation of the far western citrus after Florida's crop has been marketed.

The Unborn Mouse Skin
Do You Know the Words?

By ARTHUR BRISBANE
(Copyright, 1932, King Features Synd.)

FIVE YEARS AGO Thursday Colonel Lindbergh started his flight across the ocean. You know how this country's crime wave has rewarded him.

The question is, can anything, even the hideous murder of a child, persuade this country to do something about its bootleg-crime form of government?

TESTIMONY BEFORE the Senate banking and currency committee shows that you can make money rapidly in Wall Street, if you know how. One little group operating a pool in radio stock, made $5,000,000 in a week.

A big concern paid $23,500,000 to another concern, that represented a total investment of $1,700,000, and $90,000,000 worth of a certain stock, with a well-known name back of it, was sold to the public at $52 a share. It is worth $1 a share now.

The financial answer to the question, "Where are the snows of yesteryear?" is "They have melted."

WINNERS IN LAST AD CONTEST GIVEN

John Turk, Senior at St. Matthew's High, Captures Grand Prize of $60

When all the votes were counted, last night, for the best ad written by a member of the graduating classes of the three local high schools, printed in the News-Star Thursday evening, May 12, John G. Turk, senior at St. Matthew's high school, was discovered to be the winner of the grand prize of $60.

This contest is conducted annually, the one just finished having been the third successive event of its kind. Members of the senior classes of the high schools write the ads for the business houses of the city. Readers of the paper vote upon which one is best written and has the best appearance.

This year a total of 6622 votes were cast, 1595 of them going to John Turk, who wrote the ad for the Seven-O-Seven service station. His nearest competitor was Hazel Mitchell, Ouachita parish high school senior, who piled up a total of 1178 votes.

Beside John, one other winner from each school was named and awarded a cash prize of $30. In addition, a runner-up from each school was selected.

Runner-ups were Dorothy Jo Smith, 142 votes, St. Matthew's, author of the Monroe Transfer and Warehouse ad; Frank Renfro, 520 votes, Neville high, author of H. R. Hayes Lumber company ad, and Olive Hodge, 592 votes, Ouachita parish high, author of Keene's Slipper shop ad.

Local Legislators Indicate Coming Active Work at Capital

With the Louisiana legislature recessed over the weekend, most of Ouachita parish's representation had returned from Baton Rouge last night to spend Sunday at home, preparatory to the budget balancing attempt which will open in the capital this week.

Among the measures placed before the lawmakers during the past week was that of Senator James A. Noe of this district, proposing a constitutional amendment to authorize parishes and municipalites with the exception of New Orleans to stabilize and consolidate other than bonded indebtedness by pledging not more than two mills of general alimony for not more than 25 years.

Senator Noe expects to return to Baton Rouge tomorrow morning. He and other local legislators have indicated intentions of taking an active part in the coming budget battle.

MONROE CHAMBER TO OPPOSE SUGAR FREIGHT RATE CUT

FEAR OTHER LINES WILL FOLLOW SAME PROJECTS

This Action, They Believe, Would Injure Water Transportation Here

The action of the Louisiana public service commission in authorizing the Louisiana and Arkansas railroad to reduce its rates on sugar shipments to Shreveport and Alexandria, to 20 cents per 100 pounds, will be opposed by the Monroe chamber of commerce at a future hearing, it was announced last night by H. J. Fernandez, manager of the Monroe traffic bureau.

Mr. Fernandez appeared before the commission on April 19, when the railroad's petition for a lower rate was considered representing the chamber of commerce, and presented a petition asking a general hearing on all sugar rates in this section. He has received the assurance the hearing will be held soon, he said last night.

The chamber of commerce was convinced, it was explained at the time the petition was presented, that other railroads in this section would also lower their rates, following the Louisiana and Arkansas line's move. This, they pointed out, would force the water transportation companies to a rate which would not permit them to continue operations.

The reduction granted, it was pointed out, permits the railroads the same rates as the water carriers which had heretofore maintained a rate lower by 20 per cent. To obtain business now, water carriers would be forced to cut rates below the present schedule, erasing profits.

The chamber of commerce felt, it was pointed out at that time, that no permanent benefits would accrue from the reduction, but that the rates would be raised again after water carriers were forced to suspend operations.

What the chamber of commerce is desirous of securing, Mr. Fernandez said last night, is an equitable rate for both the railroads and water carriers, which would insure each a fair remuneration, and at the same time, permit both to continue operations.

Mr. Fernandez said he had not received definite assurance when the general rate hearing would be held, but added that it would be soon.

Program Will Be Presented at Institution for Disabled Ex-Service Men at That Place.

Members of the drum and bugle corps of the Rodney J. Hobbs post 1809, Veterans of Foreign Wars, accompanied by members of the post auxiliary, will leave Monroe at 7:30 o'clock this morning for Alexandria, where they will present a program before disabled veterans at the government hospital there, at 2:15 o'clock this afternoon.

The program will be given at the Red Cross headquarters, while veterans confined to beds will be equipped with earphones to hear a broadcast of the program, consisting of songs, dances and musical numbers.

Those who will present the program are Mary Wilber McKee, Jackson brothers, Armandine Renaud, William Fox, Max Kulcke, Mrs. John Young, Mrs. M. E. Dupont, Mr. Dupont, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hartman, Mr. and Mrs. Steve Alford, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Courtney, Mrs. Jack Meador, John and Bob Young.

FUNERAL OF W. M. GREEN HELD IN RICHLAND PARISH

The funeral of W. M. Green, 83, well known Rayville resident who died there Saturday morning, was held at the Episcopal church in that city at 7 o'clock last night. Rev. E. F. Hayward, rector of Grace church this city, and Bishop William Mercer Green, of Mississippi, officiated. The body was sent to Memphis, Tenn., on a night Illinois Central train for interment there.

Surviving are the following children: Edward Green and J. E. Green both of Rayville; R. Green, of Jackson, Miss.; Mrs. H. H. Johnson of Chicago.

PICNIC CALLED OFF

The picnic and swimming party planned to be held at Lazarre's Point yesterday afternoon by the students of the Spanish and French classes of the Ouachita junior college was postponed until next Saturday because of unsettled weather conditions.

Instructor

KATE B. STAFFORD WILL OPEN SCHOOL

First Session of Homemakers' Exposition to Be Held Tuesday Afternoon

Tuesday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the News-Star—World's Annual Homemakers' exposition and cooking demonstration will open under the direction of Mrs. Kate B. Stafford, of St. Louis, nationally known authority on home economics, dietetics and home decorations, who conducted a cooking school here last year.

The exposition will be held in the auditorium of the Central grammar school, Wood and St. John streets, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons, at 3 o'clock each day, concluding with a special evening session at 8 o'clock Friday night.

The theme of the exposition will be "How to Live Better," and housewives are invited to attend as guests of Monroe merchants. Gifts valued at more than $800 will be distributed by Monroe merchants to housewives and women attending the exposition and school, which will consist of lectures and cooking demonstrations by Mrs. Stafford and competent experts on such departments of homemaking as interior decoration, heating and lighting, furniture arrangement, home modeling and modernization, as can be arranged.

In discussing the possibilities of homemaking today, Mrs. Stafford says, "Even with reduced incomes of today, it is possible to live better than ever before. Incomes reduced far below the boom times of 1929 can, with the low commodity prices prevailing today, provide better homes, better furniture, better food, and an all-round better living than at any time since 1912, if the housewife will but study and take advantage of the opportunities open to her."

Those in charge of the exposition, which drew crowds of more than 3000 housewives last year, have asked that those attending the exposition come early, as the seating capacity of the school auditorium is limited to 1015 persons. Persons coming late, they said, will find themselves excluded because of the limited seating capacity. Women carrying children, it was announced, will not be admitted.

The exposition this year, they said, will include everything on last year's programs, with added features of interest to housewives.

TWO MEN ARE ARRESTED AFTER POOLROOM FIGHT

Two men, H. A. Brown and Murphy Kennedy, were arrested at the Midway pool hall last night by police, after an alleged altercation, and charged with fighting. Brown was released on a $25 bond, and Kennedy was held in jail in lieu of bond.

CASH FOR CHARITY HOSPITAL HERE IS TO BE REQUESTED

FEAZEL WILL INTRODUCE NEW APPROPRIATION BILL

Legislator Urges That Civic Bodies Here Lend Support to Efforts

A bill providing for the appropriation of necessary funds to establish a charity hospital in Monroe, to serve all of Northeast Louisiana, will be introduced at the present session of the legislature, it was announced last night by Representative W. C. Feazel. A measure creating the hospital, but appropriating no funds for the purpose, was passed at the last session. Mr. Feazel said that he was convinced the necessary funds would be allotted by the present state government, provided the members of the legislature are impressed with the fact that public sentiment in Northeast Louisiana is in favor of the project.

"There can be no question," said Mr. Feazel last night, "of the need for a charity hospital in this section of the state. It has been repeatedly demonstrated that a severe hardship is imposed on the people in this section of the state in sending their sick and injured, those dependent on state aid for treatment—to Shreveport or New Orleans. All of that was brought out in connection with the adoption of the bill at the last session authorizing the establishment of the hospital. Many of our plantation owners between the Ouachita and the Mississippi send their sick and injured tenants and labor to Vicksburg and Natchez. These should be provided for in their home state."

Mr. Feazel urged that the chambers of commerce, civic clubs, service clubs and other organizations in Northeast Louisiana, who are vitally interested in the subject, should get behind the project and make it clear to the legislature that such an institution is vitally necessary to the welfare of the state.

"The cost need not be great," Mr. Feazel said. "I believe that the building used as a sanitarium south of Monroe could be had for a reasonable figure, which would be much cheaper than erecting an entirely new structure. But whether that building or another is chosen, action should be taken at once to indicate public sentiment in favor of a charitable hospital for Northeast Louisiana, located in Monroe."

WOLF IS NOT SO WILD, IS LEARNED; WILL BE UPON EXHIBIT TODAY

Black Bear Cubs Slated to Stage Wrestling Match at Park This Afternoon

There has been some misunderstanding, it appears, about the wildness of the black timber wolf recently presented to the municipal zoo here, by a member of the Caldwell Parish Hunt club.

The wolf, which is two years old, according to E. B. Pruitt, who presented the animal, has been in captivity for some time and is not as wild as he appeared when unloaded, laden with chains, from a truck here the other day.

While in Columbia, Mr. Pruitt said, the animal was quiet gentle and much petted.

The wolf is now one of the prize exhibits at the municipal zoo in Forsythe park and will be out on display this afternoon.

So will the other animals, and a wrestling match between the bear cubs is scheduled for late in the afternoon.

Woman Flier First of Sex To Fly Over Ocean, Solo

CULMORE, Ulster, North Ireland, May 21 (AP)—Amelia Earhart Putnam, the first woman ever to fly the Atlantic alone, landed this afternoon in a field in this green countryside after a hazardous flight in which she conquered fog and storm and the even more dangerous menace of fire.

Four hours after she put out yesterday afternoon from Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, she saw flames spitting from her exhaust. But she didn't turn back.

Tomorrow she ,will go on to Croydon, England, in a borrowed airplane, leaving her own red and gold monoplane to be crated up and shipped back home.

Flying on the fifth anniversary of the successful conclusion of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's New York-Paris hop, she put her name just under his on the roll of trans-Atlantic honors, for Colonel Lindbergh is the only other person in the world who has made a solo trans-Atlantic flight.

It was 1:45 p.m. (7:45 a.m., eastern standard time) when her almost fuelless ship came to rest on Mr. Gallagher's field. She rounded out of it and ran the few yards to the farmhouse, where she found a very surprised Irishman.

"I did it!" she exultingly told her husband, George Palmer Putnam, publisher, who was waiting anxiously in New York for news of her.

Mrs. Putnam made approximately 2000 miles in 14 hours and 54 minutes, giving her the best time record for any of the trans-Atlantic fliers.

NO NEW TAXES

Gov. Allen, in his inaugural message to the legislature, declared that no additional property taxes of any kind should be levied, BUT, IF POSSIBLE, RELIEF BE PROVIDED FOR THE PROPERTY TAXPAYER.

That announcement of his own position has had a favorable reaction from overburdened property taxpayers in all parts of the state.

But, in this critical financial and economic situation, it is not enough that there shall be no increase in the tax on real estate.

There should be NO NEW LEVIES that, like the sales tax, the income tax and many of the other taxes that have been proposed, would be the equivalent of a property tax in the sense of laying additional imposts on the lean or empty purses of hundreds of thousands of Louisianians.

• • • •

By reason of the orgy of spending that has prevailed in recent years, with no account taken that a day of liquidation would come—that the piper would have to be settled with for the dance—Louisiana is sunk deep in a financial hole, with a deficit of about $7,000,000, represented by loans to the banks, debts of institutions and appropriations against the general fund.

It is concededly a serious situation.

But the way to solve it is not by the imposition of a series of new and objectionable taxes that will cripple business, or drive it out of the state, that will punish the mass of consumers now barely able to make both ends meet and that will retard the return of sound normal conditions.

You cannot get blood from a turnip. You cannot increase buying volume by raising prices when consumers are in the condition of distress that exists all over Louisiana today.

The way to solve the problem at Baton Rouge is in part by a stern policy of economy in the costs of government, by using the pruning knife to the limit, by the elimination of all needless departments, by the wiping out of every sinecure wherever it exists and by the suspension of all unnecessary activities that fed the taxeater at the expense of the taxpayer.

Why should not the state cut its overhead? Why should it not scrimp in every direction it can, just as every business man, every professional man, every industrialist all over the country is doing to weather the storm and get back to fundamentals—just, indeed, as the United States government is doing by the lopping off of hundreds of millions of dollars of its expenses?

The way to solve it in part is by some arrangement with the banks of the state to spread over a period of years the liquidation of $3,482,154.11 which was borrowed over and above anticipated revenues when the legislature was issuing the I.O.U.'s to the extent of billions and the treasury was dragging bottom and no one seemed to care where the money was coming from.

The way to solve it in part is by a radical revision of the terms of the act of the legislature under which it is made possible for mail votes of legislators to tap the banks for loans amounting to millions on the plea of emergency when no emergency exists.

• • • •

Gov. Allen has an opportunity not often offered to an incoming governor. So has Speaker Ellender, who presides over the house, in which alone measures of taxation can originate.

If these gentlemen, with the large influence the governor and the speaker invariably have at the opening session, will see this situation as we do, as business men all over the state see it, and make their policy one of NO ADDITIONAL TAXATION at this time, they may count confidently on the applause of the whole state, insure the success of the new administration and do a service of inestimable value to Louisiana.

BROKEN STEERING GEAR NOT CAUSE

Fatal Accident Week Ago Last Night Believed to Have Involved Two Cars

An official report, on file at police headquarters, establishes the fact that the cause of the fatal accident in which Robert L. Hager met death a week ago last night while driving his car northward on North Third street, was not caused by a broken steering rod, as was first believed. This statement was made last night by Superintendent of Police L. V. Tarver.

The report, signed by Officer Grayson, says that the steering rod was intact at the time the car crashed into a telephone pole in the 1000 block on North Third street.

Early on the morning following the accident, searchers discovered that one of the hub caps, the left one, was missing from Hager's car. This was discovered, with another cap, a smaller one which would not fit Hager's machine. The left front wheel of the latter car was broken, giving every indication of an impact of great force, although there was nothing in the vicinity to explain the damage to that wheel.

Prior accounts of the event made no mention of this in order to facilitate identification of the other car, if any, and its driver.

It is not believed that a tire on the Hager machine had blown out prior to the crash, as but one of them had been damaged and that, examined shortly after the accident, was not warm as would naturally have been the case had the machine traveled for even a short space on a flat tire.

GIRLS TO GIVE PROGRAM

Rev. G. E. Goodman, pastor, announces that the girls' chorus from the Louisiana Children's Baptist home will render a program at McClendon this evening at 7:45 o'clock. The public is invited to attend.

LEGION MEMORIAL WEEK FROM TODAY

Services at First Baptist Church Will Be Held in the Morning

One week from this morning, Memorial day services will be held at the First Baptist church at 11 o'clock when Rev. L. T. Hastings will deliver a sermon commemorating the memory of soldiers who died in the service.

The services will be held under the auspices of the American Legion, and veterans of all wars are invited to attend, it was announced. The Legion adopted the policy three years ago of holding the services in different churches each year on the Sunday morning before Memorial day, and accepted Reverend Hastings' invitation this year. A special program of music is being prepared for the service, under the direction of L. A. Stulce.

Legionnaires and veterans are asked to meet at the north side of the parish courthouse, St. John and

It's Warmer

Monroe Next to Jacksonville Yesterday in High Temperature

Monroe, yesterday, once more enjoyed the distinction of being one of the warmest spots in the country, among the major cities sending in weather records for the 24 hours ending at 8 p.m. last night.

Birmingham, Little Rock and Vicksburg, next warmest towns, each reported maximums of 80, minimums of 64. Memphis, too, had a maximum of 80 and an even higher minimum than Monroe, 66.

Other cities reporting were Atlanta, maximum 72, minimum 60; Chicago, maximum 56, minimum 54; Denver, maximum 76, minimum 50; New Orleans, maximum 74, minimum 66; and New York, with a maximum of 80, minimum of 54.

BUCKHORN LEVEE AGREEMENT STILL POSSIBLE, IS SAID

New Bids Upon Project Are to Be Opened on June 2 at Rayville

H. J. FERNANDEZ PRESENTS PETITION TO LEVEE BOARD

Majority of Landowners Accept Plans If Dyke Can Go Nearer River

Possibilities that an agreement might be reached on the problem of levee construction in Buckhorn bend vicinity were voiced last night by H. J. Fernandez, manager of the Monroe Traffic bureau and resident of that community, and W. L. Ethrldg, member of the Tensas Basin levee board, under whose direction the levees would be constructed.

New bids have been advertised for, and will be opened in Rayville on the morning of June 2, when, it is hoped, some definite action toward actual initiation of the construction work can be taken. Twelve bids submitted on previous advertising were recently rejected because of inability of landowners in the section to agree as to where the levees would be placed.

"We hope," Mr. Ethridge said, "that by the time the bids are opened, the landowners can have reached a satisfactory agreement among themselves."

A petition signed by a majority of landowners has been presented by the levee board by Mr. Fernandez, though one or two residents are said to be still dissatisfied with the plans. The petition pledges its signers to accept the levees if they can be placed nearer the river bank than the state engineers' original survey called for.

In a conference with state engineers, Mr. Ethridge said, he received the assurance the levees would be built as close to the river as a "margin of safety" would permit.

It is possible, he said, that the levees will be built along those properties whose owners have signed the petition, leaving sections open where the landowner is dissatisfied with the plan. This matter, he pointed out, rests entirely with the state board of engineers. It was also pointed out that if such levees were constructed, open sections could be easily built up in case of emergency.

Under the present plan, were the levee construction to be started immediately, the parish police jury would construct a road in the rear of homes in that vicinity.

It is hoped, Mr. Ethridge said, to begin construction of the levees immediately after the bids are opened on June 2, provided a satisfactory arrangement can be concluded.

GIANT SEAPLANE HAS REACHED AZORES ISLE ON ROUTE TO GERMANY

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—The DO-X, giant of all heavier-than-air craft, tonight completed the third leg of her homeward flight to Lake Constance, Switzerland.

Sixteen hours and 55 minutes after she lifted her huge bulk from the waters of Holyrood, Nfld., the 12-motored seaplane came to a halt in the harbor at Horta, the Azores, at 7:55 p.m., eastern standard time.

Two hours and forty minutes earlier the DO-X had messaged the Radio Marine corporation here that it was landing, but at 8:05 p.m. (eastern standard time) sent a second message saying it had spent the intervening time taxiing to a mooring place.

The 100-passenger airliner, carrying a crew of thirteen, including a woman passenger-purser, Fraulien Antonia Strassman, used two hours and one minute longer to reach Horta than Ameila Earhart Putnam took to cover approximately twice the distance in reaching Culmore, northern Ireland.

POSTOFFICE ARCHITECTS MAY GO TO WASHINGTON

It is probable that members of the firm of J. W. Smith and Associates, who drew plans for the proposed local postoffice, will be summoned to Washington, D. C., to confer at once with James E. Wetmore, supervising architect for the U. S. government, concerning the final approval of plans.

This information was conveyed in a wire received here yesterday in which Rep. Riley J. Wilson was quoted as being optimistic that work on the building will be in progress in the near future.

KILLS HIMSELF TWO YEARS AFTER HIS WIFE'S DEATH

M'COMB, Miss., May 21 (AP)—Two years ago today John Feigler's wife died. Today, Feigler, 53, killed himself by firing a shotgun charge in his stomach.

Feigler had been unemployed for several years.

About the time the gun was fired, his son, Henry, 22, was obtaining a permit for aid from the Red Cross.

F. L. Cox, Conservation Agent, Warns Against Taking Undersized Specimens

SALE OF CATCH IS ALSO AGAINST LAW OF STATE

Approximately 27,000 game fish have been turned into Bayou DeSiard and private fish ponds during the last month, F. L. Cox, state conservation agent, said yesterday in issuing a public warning against fishermen keeping undersize fish.

"There is a regular 'fish racket' going on around here," he said, "and I intend to stop it. Reports are coming in of catches beyond the limit set by law. I have been lenient and have been conducting a campaign of education against law violation for the past three months. Now I am asking the public to observe the laws, and I intend to enforce them."

Mr. Cox also pointed out that persons buying game fish were violators of the law, and said that hereafter purchasers will be prosecuted with those who trapped the fish.

"I appeal to the public to help conserve our fish supply," he said. "Many Monroe and West Monroe persons who call themselves good citizens are purchasing fish which were caught illegally. I have their names and car license numbers by the dozen, and I want them to stop it before prosecution becomes necessary. This racket is going to be ended."

Mr. Cox announced that more than 100 arrests for violation of the conservation laws had been made in the past year, saying, "I could fill the jails tomorrow if I arrested every violator I have checked up on."

Sid Joyner of Monroe was arrested yesterday on a charge of taking fish illegally and selling them to Twin Cities citizens. Four charges were filed against him, Mr. Cox said, and he was released on a $250 bond. His trial will be held next Friday.

Work of salvaging fish in Black Bayou in West Monroe will start Tuesday, Mr. Cox said, estimating that from 10,000 to 15,000 fish will be removed from ditches and pools where they were trapped when the water was lowered by removing the fill beneath the Illinois Central railroad tracks. These fish will be placed in Bayou DeSiard and private ponds, he said.

BRAGGING RUM RUNNER IS SOUGHT BY POLICE IN LINDBERGH'S CASE

HOPEWELL, N. J., May 21 (AP)—The Lindbergh murder investigation turned tonight into a concerted hunt for a Jersey rum-runner, who, two days before the famous baby's body was found, told how the infant had been killed and where the battered little form had been hidden.

There is a possibility this unnamed character may hold the key to the secret of what is already one of the world's strangest crime mysteries.

He has boasted, it was disclosed today, that he knows several of the band who perpetrated the fiendish kidnaping and killing.

As new light was thrown on this "mysterious gangster," now sought throughout the east, John Hughes Curtis, "hoax negotiator," conferred in his jail cell at Flemington with an attorney ,and "Jafsie," the ransom-payer, went dashing through New England on an unexplained mission.

CATHOLIC ORDER BEGINS ANNUAL SESSIONS TODAY

T. H. McMillan, B. J. Renaud and L. H. Krogmire are in Baton Rouge today attending the annual convention of the Knights of Columbus which meets today and tomorrow.

Efforts are to be exerted to secure the 1933 convention for Monroe. This will work the twenty-fifth anniversary of the council's establishment here and will be a notable event when combined with the holding of the state convention.

CALIFORNIAN FRUITS TO BE SOLD IN FLORIDA MARKETS

TAMPA, Fla., May 21 (AP)—California citrus fruit will be offered for sale in Florida within the next week, it was learned today from a local produce dealer.

It will be the first time in 15 years, Florida citrus exchange officials said, that California fruit has been allowed within the borders of Florida. A ruling of the state plant board had provided an effective barrier, but the ruling was modified recently. It now permits importation of the far western citrus after Florida's crop has been marketed.

Money Made Quickly
The Unborn Mouse Skin
Do You Know the Words?

By ARTHUR BRISBANE
(Copyright, 1932, King Features Synd.)

FIVE YEARS AGO Thursday Colonel Lindbergh started his flight across the ocean. You know how this country's crime wave has rewarded him.

The question is, can anything, even the hideous murder of a child, persuade this country to do something about its bootleg-crime form of government?

TESTIMONY BEFORE the Senate banking and currency committee shows that you can make money rapidly in Wall Street, if you know how. One little group operating a pool in radio stock, made $5,000,000 in a week.

A big concern paid $23,500,000 to another concern, that represented a total investment of $1,700,000, and $90,000,000 worth of a certain stock, with a well-known name back of it, was sold to the public at $52 a share. It is worth $1 a share now.

The financial answer to the question, "Where are the snows of yesteryear?" is "They have melted."

FROM THE SKIN OF an embryonic baby house, so small that it isn't born yet, scientists at the Rockefeller Institute take a substance that stops cancerous growth in a fullsized mouse. Rockefeller scientists, constantly fighting disease, discover in the skin of unborn mammals, including ourselves, a substance that regulates growth, not only in cancers, but all growth, compelling a finger, or an

When all the votes were counted, last night, for the best ad written by a member of the graduating classes of the three local high schools, printed in the News-Star Thursday evening, May 12, John G. Turk, senior at St. Matthew's high school, was discovered to be the winner of the grand prize of $60.

This contest is conducted annually, the one just finished having been the third successive event of its kind. Members of the senior classes of the high schools write the ads for the business houses of the city. Readers of the paper vote upon which one is best written and has the best appearance.

This year a total of 6622 votes were cast, 1595 of them going to John Turk, who wrote the ad for the Seven-O-Seven service station. His nearest competitor was Hazel Mitchell, Ouachita parish high school senior, who piled up a total of 1178 votes.

Beside John, one other winner from each school was named and awarded a cash prize of $30. In addition, a runner-up from each school was selected.

Local Legislators Indicate Coming Active Work at Capital

With the Louisiana legislature recessed over the weekend, most of Ouachita parish's representation had returned from Baton Rouge last night to spend Sunday at home, preparatory to the budget balancing attempt which will open in the capital this week.

Among the measures placed before the lawmakers during the past week was that of Senator James A. Noe of this district, proposing a constitutional amendment to authorize parishes and municipalites with the exception of New Orleans to stabilize and consolidate other than bonded indebtedness by pledging not more than two mills of general alimony for not more than 25 years.

Senator Noe expects to return to Baton Rouge tomorrow morning. He and other local legislators have indicated intentions of taking an active part in the coming budget battle.

MONROE CHAMBER TO OPPOSE SUGAR FREIGHT RATE CUT

FEAR OTHER LINES WILL FOLLOW SAME PROJECTS

The action of the Louisiana public service commission in authorizing the Louisiana and Arkansas railroad to reduce its rates on sugar shipments to Shreveport and Alexandria, to 20 cents per 100 pounds, will be opposed by the Monroe chamber of commerce at a future hearing, it was announced last night by H. J. Fernandez, manager of the Monroe traffic bureau.

Mr. Fernandez appeared before the commission on April 19, when the railroad's petition for a lower rate was considered representing the chamber of commerce, and presented a petition asking a general hearing on all sugar rates in this section. He has received the assurance the hearing will be held soon, he said last night.

The chamber of commerce was convinced, it was explained at the time the petition was presented, that other railroads in this section would also lower their rates, following the Louisiana and Arkansas line's move. This, they pointed out, would force the water transportation companies to a rate which would not permit them to continue operations.

The reduction granted, it was pointed out, permits the railroads the same rates as the water carriers which had heretofore maintained a rate lower by 20 per cent. To obtain business now, water carriers would be forced to cut rates below the present schedule, erasing profits.

The chamber of commerce felt, it was pointed out at that time, that no permanent benefits would accrue from the reduction, but that the rates would be raised again after water carriers were forced to suspend operations.

What the chamber of commerce is desirous of securing, Mr. Fernandez said last night, is an equitable rate for both the railroads and water carriers, which would insure each a fair remuneration, and at the same time, permit both to continue operations.

Mr. Fernandez said he had not received definite assurance when the general rate hearing would be held, but added that it would be soon.

Program Will Be Presented at Institution for Disabled Ex-Service Men at That Place.

Members of the drum and bugle corps of the Rodney J. Hobbs post 1809, Veterans of Foreign Wars, accompanied by members of the post auxiliary, will leave Monroe at 7:30 o'clock this morning for Alexandria, where they will present a program before disabled veterans at the government hospital there, at 2:15 o'clock this afternoon.

The program will be given at the Red Cross headquarters, while veterans confined to beds will be equipped with earphones to hear a broadcast of the program, consisting of songs, dances and musical numbers.

Those who will present the program are Mary Wilber McKee, Jackson brothers, Armandine Renaud, William Fox, Max Kulcke, Mrs. John Young, Mrs. M. E. Dupont, Mr. Dupont, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hartman, Mr. and Mrs. Steve Alford, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Courtney, Mrs. Jack Meador, John and Bob Young.

FUNERAL OF W. M. GREEN HELD IN RICHLAND PARISH

The funeral of W. M. Green, 83, well known Rayville resident who died there Saturday morning, was held at the Episcopal church in that city at 7 o'clock last night. Rev. E. F. Hayward, rector of Grace church this city, and Bishop William Mercer Green, of Mississippi, officiated. The body was sent to Memphis, Tenn., on a night Illinois Central train for interment there.

PICNIC CALLED OFF

The picnic and swimming party planned to be held at Lazarre's Point yesterday afternoon by the students of the Spanish and French classes of the Ouachita junior college was postponed until next Saturday because of unsettled weather conditions.

Instructor

KATE B. STAFFORD WILL OPEN SCHOOL

First Session of Homemakers' Exposition to Be Held Tuesday Afternoon

Tuesday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the News-Star—World's Annual Homemakers' exposition and cooking demonstration will open under the direction of Mrs. Kate B. Stafford, of St. Louis, nationally known authority on home economics, dietetics and home decorations, who conducted a cooking school here last year.

The exposition will be held in the auditorium of the Central grammar school, Wood and St. John streets, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons, at 3 o'clock each day, concluding with a special evening session at 8 o'clock Friday night.

The theme of the exposition will be "How to Live Better," and housewives are invited to attend as guests of Monroe merchants. Gifts valued at more than $800 will be distributed by Monroe merchants to housewives and women attending the exposition and school, which will consist of lectures and cooking demonstrations by Mrs. Stafford and competent experts on such departments of homemaking as interior decoration, heating and lighting, furniture arrangement, home modeling and modernization, as can be arranged.

In discussing the possibilities of homemaking today, Mrs. Stafford says, "Even with reduced incomes of today, it is possible to live better than ever before. Incomes reduced far below the boom times of 1929 can, with the low commodity prices prevailing today, provide better homes, better furniture, better food, and an all-round better living than at any time since 1912, if the housewife will but study and take advantage of the opportunities open to her."

Those in charge of the exposition, which drew crowds of more than 3000 housewives last year, have asked that those attending the exposition come early, as the seating capacity of the school auditorium is limited to 1015 persons. Persons coming late, they said, will find themselves excluded because of the limited seating capacity. Women carrying children, it was announced, will not be admitted.

The exposition this year, they said, will include everything on last year's programs, with added features of interest to housewives.

TWO MEN ARE ARRESTED AFTER POOLROOM FIGHT

Two men, H. A. Brown and Murphy Kennedy, were arrested at the Midway pool hall last night by police, after an alleged altercation, and charged with fighting. Brown was released on a $25 bond, and Kennedy was held in jail in lieu of bond.

CASH FOR CHARITY HOSPITAL HERE IS TO BE REQUESTED

FEAZEL WILL INTRODUCE NEW APPROPRIATION BILL

A bill providing for the appropriation of necessary funds to establish a charity hospital in Monroe, to serve all of Northeast Louisiana, will be introduced at the present session of the legislature, it was announced last night by Representative W. C. Feazel. A measure creating the hospital, but appropriating no funds for the purpose, was passed at the last session. Mr. Feazel said that he was convinced the necessary funds would be allotted by the present state government, provided the members of the legislature are impressed with the fact that public sentiment in Northeast Louisiana is in favor of the project.

"There can be no question," said Mr. Feazel last night, "of the need for a charity hospital in this section of the state. It has been repeatedly demonstrated that a severe hardship is imposed on the people in this section of the state in sending their sick and injured, those dependent on state aid for treatment—to Shreveport or New Orleans. All of that was brought out in connection with the adoption of the bill at the last session authorizing the establishment of the hospital. Many of our plantation owners between the Ouachita and the Mississippi send their sick and injured tenants and labor to Vicksburg and Natchez. These should be provided for in their home state."

Mr. Feazel urged that the chambers of commerce, civic clubs, service clubs and other organizations in Northeast Louisiana, who are vitally interested in the subject, should get behind the project and make it clear to the legislature that such an institution is vitally necessary to the welfare of the state.

"The cost need not be great," Mr. Feazel said. "I believe that the building used as a sanitarium south of Monroe could be had for a reasonable figure, which would be much cheaper than erecting an entirely new structure. But whether that building or another is chosen, action should be taken at once to indicate public sentiment in favor of a charitable hospital for Northeast Louisiana, located in Monroe."

WOLF IS NOT SO WILD, IS LEARNED; WILL BE UPON EXHIBIT TODAY

Black Bear Cubs Slated to Stage Wrestling Match at Park This Afternoon

There has been some misunderstanding, it appears, about the wildness of the black timber wolf recently presented to the municipal zoo here, by a member of the Caldwell Parish Hunt club.

The wolf, which is two years old, according to E. B. Pruitt, who presented the animal, has been in captivity for some time and is not as wild as he appeared when unloaded, laden with chains, from a truck here the other day.

While in Columbia, Mr. Pruitt said, the animal was quiet gentle and much petted.

The wolf is now one of the prize exhibits at the municipal zoo in Forsythe park and will be out on display this afternoon.

So will the other animals, and a wrestling match between the bear cubs is scheduled for late in the afternoon.

Woman Flier First of Sex To Fly Over Ocean, Solo

CULMORE, Ulster, North Ireland, May 21 (AP)—Amelia Earhart Putnam, the first woman ever to fly the Atlantic alone, landed this afternoon in a field in this green countryside after a hazardous flight in which she conquered fog and storm and the even more dangerous menace of fire.

Four hours after she put out yesterday afternoon from Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, she saw flames spitting from her exhaust. But she didn't turn back.

Tomorrow she ,will go on to Croydon, England, in a borrowed airplane, leaving her own red and gold monoplane to be crated up and shipped back home.

Flying on the fifth anniversary of the successful conclusion of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's New York-Paris hop, she put her name just under his on the roll of trans-Atlantic honors, for Colonel Lindbergh is the only other person in the world who has made a solo trans-Atlantic flight.

It was 1:45 p.m. (7:45 a.m., eastern standard time) when her almost fuelless ship came to rest on Mr. Gallagher's field. She rounded out of it and ran the few yards to the farmhouse, where she found a very surprised Irishman.

"I did it!" she exultingly told her husband, George Palmer Putnam, publisher, who was waiting anxiously in New York for news of her.

Mrs. Putnam made approximately 2000 miles in 14 hours and 54 minutes, giving her the best time record for any of the trans-Atlantic fliers.

NO NEW TAXES

Gov. Allen, in his inaugural message to the legislature, declared that no additional property taxes of any kind should be levied, BUT, IF POSSIBLE, RELIEF BE PROVIDED FOR THE PROPERTY TAXPAYER.

That announcement of his own position has had a favorable reaction from overburdened property taxpayers in all parts of the state.

But, in this critical financial and economic situation, it is not enough that there shall be no increase in the tax on real estate.

There should be NO NEW LEVIES that, like the sales tax, the income tax and many of the other taxes that have been proposed, would be the equivalent of a property tax in the sense of laying additional imposts on the lean or empty purses of hundreds of thousands of Louisianians.

* * * *

By reason of the orgy of spending that has prevailed in recent years, with no account taken that a day of liquidation would come—that the piper would have to be settled with for the dance—Louisiana is sunk deep in a financial hole, with a deficit of about $7,000,000, represented by loans to the banks, debts of institutions and appropriations against the general fund.

It is concededly a serious situation.

But the way to solve it is not by the imposition of a series of new and objectionable taxes that will cripple business, or drive it out of the state, that will punish the mass of consumers now barely able to make both ends meet and that will retard the return of sound normal conditions.

You cannot get blood from a turnip. You cannot increase buying volume by raising prices when consumers are in the condition of distress that exists all over Louisiana today.

The way to solve the problem at Baton Rouge is in part by a stern policy of economy in the costs of government, by using the pruning knife to the limit, by the elimination of all needless departments, by the wiping out of every sinecure wherever it exists and by the suspension of all unnecessary activities that fed the taxeater at the expense of the taxpayer.

Why should not the state cut its overhead? Why should it not scrimp in every direction it can, just as every business man, every professional man, every industrialist all over the country is doing to weather the storm and get back to fundamentals—just, indeed, as the United States government is doing by the lopping off of hundreds of millions of dollars of its expenses?

The way to solve it in part is by some arrangement with the banks of the state to spread over a period of years the liquidation of $3,482,154.11 which was borrowed over and above anticipated revenues when the legislature was issuing the I.O.U.'s to the extent of billions and the treasury was dragging bottom and no one seemed to care where the money was coming from.

The way to solve it in part is by a radical revision of the terms of the act of the legislature under which it is made possible for mail votes of legislators to tap the banks for loans amounting to millions on the plea of emergency when no emergency exists.

* * * *

Gov. Allen has an opportunity not often offered to an incoming governor. So has Speaker Ellender, who presides over the house, in which alone measures of taxation can originate.

If these gentlemen, with the large influence the governor and the speaker invariably have at the opening session, will see this situation as we do, as business men all over the state see it, and make their policy one of NO ADDITIONAL TAXATION at this time, they may count confidently on the applause of the whole state, insure the success of the new administration and do a service of inestimable value to Louisiana.

BROKEN STEERING GEAR NOT CAUSE

Fatal Accident Week Ago Last Night Believed to Have Involved Two Cars

An official report, on file at police headquarters, establishes the fact that the cause of the fatal accident in which Robert L. Hager met death a week ago last night while driving his car northward on North Third street, was not caused by a broken steering rod, as was first believed. This statement was made last night by Superintendent of Police L. V. Tarver.

The report, signed by Officer Grayson, says that the steering rod was intact at the time the car crashed into a telephone pole in the 1000 block on North Third street.

Early on the morning following the accident, searchers discovered that one of the hub caps, the left one, was missing from Hager's car. This was discovered, with another cap, a smaller one which would not fit Hager's machine. The left front wheel of the latter car was broken, giving every indication of an impact of great force, although there was nothing in the vicinity to explain the damage to that wheel.

Prior accounts of the event made no mention of this in order to facilitate identification of the other car, if any, and its driver.

It is not believed that a tire on the Hager machine had blown out prior to the crash, as but one of them had been damaged and that, examined shortly after the accident, was not warm as would naturally have been the case had the machine traveled for even a short space on a flat tire.

GIRLS TO GIVE PROGRAM

Rev. G. E. Goodman, pastor, announces that the girls' chorus from the Louisiana Children's Baptist home will render a program at McClendon this evening at 7:45 o'clock. The public is invited to attend.

LEGION MEMORIAL WEEK FROM TODAY

Services at First Baptist Church Will Be Held in the Morning

One week from this morning, Memorial day services will be held at the First Baptist church at 11 o'clock when Rev. L. T. Hastings will deliver a sermon commemorating the memory of soldiers who died in the service.

The services will be held under the auspices of the American Legion, and veterans of all wars are invited to attend, it was announced. The Legion adopted the policy three years ago of holding the services in different churches each year on the Sunday morning before Memorial day, and accepted Reverend Hastings' invitation this year. A special program of music is being prepared for the service, under the direction of L. A. Stulce.

Legionnaires and veterans are asked to meet at the north side of the parish courthouse, St. John and

It's Warmer

Monroe Next to Jacksonville Yesterday in High Temperature

Monroe, yesterday, once more enjoyed the distinction of being one of the warmest spots in the country, among the major cities sending in weather records for the 24 hours ending at 8 p.m. last night.

Birmingham, Little Rock and Vicksburg, next warmest towns, each reported maximums of 80, minimums of 64. Memphis, too, had a maximum of 80 and an even higher minimum than Monroe, 66.

Other cities reporting were Atlanta, maximum 72, minimum 60; Chicago, maximum 56, minimum 54; Denver, maximum 76, minimum 50; New Orleans, maximum 74, minimum 66; and New York, with a maximum of 80, minimum of 54.

BUCKHORN LEVEE AGREEMENT STILL POSSIBLE, IS SAID

New Bids Upon Project Are to Be Opened on June 2 at Rayville

H. J. FERNANDEZ PRESENTS PETITION TO LEVEE BOARD

Majority of Landowners Accept Plans If Dyke Can Go Nearer River

Possibilities that an agreement might be reached on the problem of levee construction in Buckhorn bend vicinity were voiced last night by H. J. Fernandez, manager of the Monroe Traffic bureau and resident of that community, and W. L. Ethridg, member of the Tensas Basin levee board, under whose direction the levees would be constructed.

New bids have been advertised for, and will be opened in Rayville on the morning of June 2, when, it is hoped, some definite action toward actual initiation of the construction work can be taken. Twelve bids submitted on previous advertising were recently rejected because of inability of landowners in the section to agree as to where the levees would be placed.

"We hope," Mr. Ethridge said, "that by the time the bids are opened, the landowners can have reached a satisfactory agreement among themselves."

A petition signed by a majority of landowners has been presented by the levee board by Mr. Fernandez, though one or two residents are said to be still dissatisfied with the plans. The petition pledges its signers to accept the levees if they can be placed nearer the river bank than the state engineers' original survey called for.

In a conference with state engineers, Mr. Ethridge said, he received the assurance the levees would be built as close to the river as a "margin of safety" would permit.

It is possible, he said, that the levees will be built along those properties whose owners have signed the petition, leaving sections open where the landowner is dissatisfied with the plan. This matter, he pointed out, rests entirely with the state board of engineers. It was also pointed out that if such levees were constructed, open sections could be easily built up in case of emergency.

Under the present plan, were the levee construction to be started immediately, the parish police jury would construct a road in the rear of homes in that vicinity.

It is hoped, Mr. Ethridge said, to begin construction of the levees immediately after the bids are opened on June 2, provided a satisfactory arrangement can be concluded.

GIANT SEAPLANE HAS REACHED AZORES ISLE ON ROUTE TO GERMANY

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—The DO-X, giant of all heavier-than-air craft, tonight completed the third leg of her homeward flight to Lake Constance, Switzerland.

Sixteen hours and 55 minutes after she lifted her huge bulk from the waters of Holyrood, Nfld., the 12-motored seaplane came to a halt in the harbor at Horta, the Azores, at 7:55 p.m., eastern standard time.

Two hours and forty minutes earlier the DO-X had messaged the Radio Marine corporation here that it was landing, but at 8:05 p.m. (eastern standard time) sent a second message saying it had spent the intervening time taxiing to a mooring place.

The 100-passenger airliner, carrying a crew of thirteen, including a woman passenger-purser, Fraulien Antonia Strassman, used two hours and one minute longer to reach Horta than Ameila Earhart Putnam took to cover approximately twice the distance in reaching Culmore, northern Ireland.

POSTOFFICE ARCHITECTS MAY GO TO WASHINGTON

It is probable that members of the firm of J. W. Smith and Associates, who drew plans for the proposed local postoffice, will be summoned to Washington, D. C., to confer at once with James E. Wetmore, supervising architect for the U. S. government, concerning the final approval of plans.

This information was conveyed in a wire received here yesterday in which Rep. Riley J. Wilson was quoted as being optimistic that work on the building will be in progress in the near future.

KILLS HIMSELF TWO YEARS AFTER HIS WIFE'S DEATH

M'COMB, Miss., May 21 (AP)—Two years ago today John Feigler's wife died. Today, Feigler, 53, killed himself by firing a shotgun charge in his stomach.

Feigler had been unemployed for several years.

About the time the gun was fired, his son, Henry, 22, was obtaining a permit for aid from the Red Cross.

NEW INDUSTRY IS STARTED NEARBY

Broom and Mop Handles and Chair Rungs Made at Mill Out on Cheniere

Another new industry has sprung up in this section of north Louisiana and has already given employment to approximately 60 men, beside offering another use for the timber of north Louisiana.

The wood mill at Cheniere, owned by the Edenhorn estate, has recently added a broom handle factory to its other branches.

Seasoned pine and gum logs, taken from the drying kilns there, are cut into sticks inch and one-quarter square, of the proper length. These pieces are run through sanding and turning machines, emerging as full length broom and mop sticks.

Wrapped in paper, in bundles of 50 handles each, the handles are wrapped and shipped by rail and water to New Orleans, for distribution all over the world.

Beside the regulation broom and mop handles, handles are also made for hearth or "toy" brooms.

Statement on Taxation Is Issued by M. C. Redmond

Declaring that the financial affairs of the state of Louisiana and the city of Monroe are suffering from "one long process of poor management which is piling a bigger load on the taxpayer year after year," Ex-senator M. C. Redmond yesterday issued a public statement calling on citizens of both the city and state to "avail themselves of the facts, and fight this evil to the very last ditch."

"The legislature this year faces a problem of putting this state back on a business basis, not political," he said, "and the same conditions apply to Monroe, where the situation, considering the resources, are every whit as bad as the state. There have been too many political handouts in both governments, and the time to stop such practice is right now."

"The state, with a grand total indebtedness of $115,887,744.65 on April 12, 1932, according to official figures, must cease spending money as if it were water, cut every expense to the very bone, and adopt measures which will at least give state finances the semblance of being run like a business and not a merry-go-round. Surplus employes, a notorious leak, must be dispensed with," he said, "and every possible leak stopped. The taxpayers cannot bear a greater burden, but under the present system that is what is facing them.

It All Costs Money

"The same is true of the city of Monroe," he said. "Too many political jobs have been created. When you walk in the city hall there are so many employes they get in your way; you can hardly get around for them. And every one is costing the people money, not only that they are useless fixtures, but that they cannot find enough to keep themselves busy. A housecleaning there could be instituted both to the profit and relief of the people.

"Under the present system of management in Monroe," Mr. Redmond asserted, "the cost of city government has risen from $256,386.07, exclusive of utilities expense, in 1926, to $503,694.92 in 1931, a rise of 96 per cent in governing costs. The service in no way justifies the rise.

"Worse, still," he continued, "while our current assets have risen 143 per cent in that time, our current liabilities have jumped by 459 per cent. A bond issue of $950,000 floated in 1920 is being totally ignored and the published reports do not show any sinking fund has been provided to retire the issue. Under such practice we are merely hoarding up trouble, at compound interest, which will break upon us at some future time. Those bonds must be paid, and to pay them without raising taxes already exorbitant, savings must be effected. At the present rate of retirement, our school bonds will not be paid for 120 years, according to the figures of the city audit itself. A $600,000 issue is being paid at the rate of $5000 a year. The city's total revenue has increased by an average of 56 per cent from 1926 to 1931, and at the same time liabilities increased 459 per cent. Nothing is being done to put this city on a business like basis."

Mr. Redmond declared that according to tax records, with Monroe permitted a tax levy of 10 mills, when other municipalities are only permitted a seven-mill levy for the general fund, citizens are required to pay an extra one and a half mills for the schools, which was intended to be provided for in the 10-mill levy, also one mill for the junior college, two mills for the parish special tax, one-quarter for the parish jail and courthouse, five and three-quarters mills for the state, and special city taxes, making a total of 30 and one-quarter mills tax.

"Such taxation," he said, "should be cutting down our bonded indebtedness. The facts are, the higher the tax gets, it seems, the higher our indebtedness gets. On April 24, 1931, our bonded debt in the city was $2,809,000. In addition the city owes $413,021.86 current debt, according to their last published statement. Permitted three mills extra levy for our schools, we must hike the levy still higher. If that is good business in times like these, then good business has changed colors like a chameleon."

Mr. Redmond also declared "salaries should be reduced from the very top down, in keeping with the fall in commodity prices. Business men everywhere have been forced to cut salaries; only municipal and state governments can, it seems, afford bloated payrolls with salaries far in advance of what they should be. Merely as a matter of business sense, for the good of the people, and to insure a just price for the service rendered, a reduction of expenses and salaries should be instituted from the top to the bottom, starting with the higher officials first."

Same Conditions Apply

The same conditions and rules apply to the state, Mr. Redmond said, predicting that a stormy legislative session is in the offing, as the necessity of reducing state debts is brought to the front.

"On March 31, this year," he pointed out, "there was an overdraft of $1,202,981.31 in the general fund of 1931, and past due board of liquidation loans, borrowed to run the state government, total $3,482,154.11, according to compilations published on April 12, 1932. The state penitentiary is $820,000 in debt. All of our gasoline taxes, at five cents per gallon, totaling more than nine million dollars yearly, are pledged to bond issues. Our present state property tax of five and three-quarter mills will not bear the expense of government and reduce our debts. Consequently, drastic economies must be put into practice.

"The common people are carrying all they can now," Mr. Redmond pointed out, "and to increase their taxes would be piling on the last straw, forcing many of them into bankruptcy and ruin. Yet some new sources of revenue must be found.

"They should be raised, only after economies have been practiced, political plums abolished, political henchmen ousted from payrolls," he said, "by higher income, inheritance, severance, and corporation taxes. Intangibles escaping taxation must be made to bear part of the burden, assessments must be equalized, special tax bills destroyed, and those able to bear expenses of government forced to contribute their just proportion.

"But first of all, political waste, enormous and useless, in both Monroe and the state, must be abolished," he said.

Abolish Waste

"To talk of raising taxes under the present system is nothing less than a crime against the people of a municipality or state. The present system in both the city and state in itself is an affront to any man who gives the expenditures any consideration whatsoever."

"A check Saturday of the parish and city charitable organizations," Mr. Redmond said last night, "revealed that 1550 families, or nearly 7750 persons, are receiving direct or indirect aid from these organizations, according to the records kept. More than 10 per cent of the population of the parish are in a condition of destitution or near poverty. In all fairness, does that constitute a condition warranting extravagance on the part of public officials?"

$100,000 Spent
To Perfect This Perfumed Mist
. . . The Ideal Way to Kill All
Flies and Mosquitoes

Fly-Tox was developed at Mellon Institute of Industrial Research by Rex Research Fellowship. Ten years have been spent in perfecting it, and more than $100,000.

It is based on extracts from flowers of Japan, which insects cannot tolerate. An extract pleasant in odor, harmless to people, stainless to anything. But every fly or mosquito perishes quickly at a touch of the mist it creates.

These pests are your deadly enemies. They carry disease germs to infect every food they touch. Their every bite is poison. Over 30 diseases are carried in this way. Many thousands of children, every year, die from their contaminations.

Fly-Tox, used rightly, kills all these pests at once. The way is easy and pleasant, the results are sure, the cost 1 or 2 cents per room.

This new Fly-Tox—based on flowers—is many times as effective as methods of the past. Every lot is tested on flies in our laboratory to insure its quick effects.

FLY-TOX ONLY

A Rex Research Product

Use Fly-Tox only, and always in the new-type Fly-Tox sprayer. Spray to the ceiling, to create in your room a cloud of all-pervading mist. As this mist falls, every fly or mosquito dies at its touch. Yet no harm to people, no offense, no stains. Accept nothing less effective when the safety of your home is at stake. Sold in a million stores the world over. Get Fly-Tox now. Made by the Makers of Moth-Tox.

NEW INDUSTRY IS STARTED NEARBY

Another new industry has sprung up in this section of north Louisiana and has already given employment to approximately 60 men, beside offering another use for the timber of north Louisiana.

The wood mill at Cheniere, owned by the Edenhorn estate, has recently added a broom handle factory to its other branches.

Seasoned pine and gum logs, taken from the drying kilns there, are cut into sticks inch and one-quarter square, of the proper length. These pieces are run through sanding and turning machines, emerging as full length broom and mop sticks.

Wrapped in paper, in bundles of 50 handles each, the handles are wrapped and shipped by rail and water to New Orleans, for distribution all over the world.

Beside the regulation broom and mop handles, handles are also made for hearth or "toy" brooms.

Statement on Taxation Is Issued by M. C. Redmond

Declaring that the financial affairs of the state of Louisiana and the city of Monroe are suffering from "one long process of poor management which is piling a bigger load on the taxpayer year after year," Ex-senator M. C. Redmond yesterday issued a public statement calling on citizens of both the city and state to "avail themselves of the facts, and fight this evil to the very last ditch."

"The legislature this year faces a problem of putting this state back on a business basis, not political," he said, "and the same conditions apply to Monroe, where the situation, considering the resources, are every whit as bad as the state. There have been too many political handouts in both governments, and the time to stop such practice is right now."

"The state, with a grand total indebtedness of $115,887,744.65 on April 12, 1932, according to official figures, must cease spending money as if it were water, cut every expense to the very bone, and adopt measures which will at least give state finances the semblance of being run like a business and not a merry-go-round. Surplus employes, a notorious leak, must be dispensed with," he said, "and every possible leak stopped. The taxpayers cannot bear a greater burden, but under the present system that is what is facing them.

It All Costs Money

"The same is true of the city of Monroe," he said. "Too many political jobs have been created. When you walk in the city hall there are so many employes they get in your way; you can hardly get around for them. And every one is costing the people money, not only that they are useless fixtures, but that they cannot find enough to keep themselves busy. A housecleaning there could be instituted both to the profit and relief of the people.

"Under the present system of management in Monroe," Mr. Redmond asserted, "the cost of city government has risen from $256,386.07, exclusive of utilities expense, in 1926, to $503,694.92 in 1931, a rise of 96 per cent in governing costs. The service in no way justifies the rise.

"Worse, still," he continued, "while our current assets have risen 143 per cent in that time, our current liabilities have jumped by 459 per cent. A bond issue of $950,000 floated in 1920 is being totally ignored and the published reports do not show any sinking fund has been provided to retire the issue. Under such practice we are merely hoarding up trouble, at compound interest, which will break upon us at some future time. Those bonds must be paid, and to pay them without raising taxes already exorbitant, savings must be effected. At the present rate of retirement, our school bonds will not be paid for 120 years, according to the figures of the city audit itself. A $600,000 issue is being paid at the rate of $5000 a year. The city's total revenue has increased by an average of 56 per cent from 1926 to 1931, and at the same time liabilities increased 459 per cent. Nothing is being done to put this city on a business like basis."

Mr. Redmond declared that according to tax records, with Monroe permitted a tax levy of 10 mills, when other municipalities are only permitted a seven-mill levy for the general fund, citizens are required to pay an extra one and a half mills for the schools, which was intended to be provided for in the 10-mill levy, also one mill for the junior college, two mills for the parish special tax, one-quarter for the parish jail and courthouse, five and three-quarters mills for the state, and special city taxes, making a total of 30 and one-quarter mills tax.

"Such taxation," he said, "should be cutting down our bonded indebtedness. The facts are, the higher the tax gets, it seems, the higher our indebtedness gets. On April 24, 1931, our bonded debt in the city was $2,809,000. In addition the city owes $413,021.86 current debt, according to their last published statement. Permitted three mills extra levy for our schools, we must hike the levy still higher. If that is good business in times like these, then good business has changed colors like a chameleon."

Mr. Redmond also declared "salaries should be reduced from the very top down, in keeping with the fall in commodity prices. Business men everywhere have been forced to cut salaries; only municipal and state governments can, it seems, afford bloated payrolls with salaries far in advance of what they should be. Merely as a matter of business sense, for the good of the people, and to insure a just price for the service rendered, a reduction of expenses and salaries should be instituted from the top to the bottom, starting with the higher officials first."

Same Conditions Apply

The same conditions and rules apply to the state, Mr. Redmond said, predicting that a stormy legislative session is in the offing, as the necessity of reducing state debts is brought to the front.

"On March 31, this year," he pointed out, "there was an overdraft of $1,202,981.31 in the general fund of 1931, and past due board of liquidation loans, borrowed to run the state government, total $3,482,154.11, according to compilations published on April 12, 1932. HILL'S FUNERAL IS TO BE HELD HERE

Committed Suicide Yesterday Morning by Leaping Off Traffic Bridge

Funeral services will be conducted at 4 o'clock this afternoon, at the home at 802 South Third street, West Monroe, for C. P. Hill, who committed suicide yesterday morning by leaping off the traffic bridge here into the Ouachita river. Rev. E. E. Huntsberry, pastor of the West Monroe First Baptist church, officiating. Burial will be in the Hosley cemetery.

Pallbearers will be O. L. Hoskins, W. A. Cooper, J. A. Mallury, V. W. Sehon, S. J. Daigle, and J. P. Thomasie.

His is survived by his widow and four children, his father and a brother. The children are Charles, 13; Norma Lee, 10; Carl Edwin, 7; James Clifton, 4. The father is Jack Hill of Aberdeen, Miss. The brother resides at Baton Rouge.

Hill drowned at 8:55 o'clock and his body was recovered at 10 o'clock by firemen and American Legion members. The body was taken from the river at a point opposite the rear of the Covington building, where it was discovered by use of drag-lines.

After being pulled into a motorboat, the body was taken down the river to an undertaking establishment located on South Grand street. Steve Daigle, employe of the telephone company, and Dr. J. H. Pakey, identified the body at the establishment.

Hill has been suffering ill health and was evidently despondent when he decided to drown himself. It was rumored that he was despondent because of having been "laid off" from his job, but this was said to be untrue. J. W. Warren, manager of the telephone company, said Hill had worked for the company for 15 years, and that his seniority in years of service assured him he would not be laid off. His salary was not subject to being cut, said Mr. Warren.

The drowned man had been taking his vacation. Yesterday morning he visited the telephone company's plant and told fellow workers he was a "sick man." About 8:15 o'clock he called at the Clinic and told an attendant he wanted attention from his family doctor. The doctor happened to be out of the building, and Hill said he would return.

Hill returned about 30 minutes later and told the attendant he was very ill. He requested a patient's room. The attendant walked up stairs to the second floor to make arrangements for a room, and to bring the elevator down to the first floor. When the attendant came down in the elevator, Hill had left the building.

Indications were that Hill walked directly to the bridge from the Clinic. The hands of his watch stopped their movement at two minutes before 9 o'clock, showing that a few minutes had elapsed between the time he left the Clinic and arrived at the bridge.

Hill's act in jumping off the bridge was witnessed by 10 or 12 people, some of whom were walking or riding across the bridge. Among the witnesses were S. A. Dickinson of Fondale, Ben Roselle, laundry truck driver. Fred Graff, 13-year-old boy, residing at 506 Coleman avenue, West Monroe, was rummaging on the east bank of the river near the bridge, and saw Hill wave his arms wildly in the water.

More Than 25 Babies Here Already Entered in Contest

Although registration has been in progress only two days, more than 25 babies had been entered Saturday in the Grotto "Better Baby" health contest, conducted by Teflis Grotto.

In addition to a thorough physical examination by baby specialists, assisted by nurses, 25 prizes will be awarded to the 25 most perfect babies in the contest.

A systematic and accurate health report will be made of every baby entered in the health contest. The examinations will be made from a regular health form of chart.

Questions will be asked relative to the baby's past health, and expert advice will be given parents relative to the baby's diet, the bath, clothing, rest, sleep and airing. After the examinations are completed the health charts showing the exact health status of each baby will be returned to the parents. The Grotto "Better Baby" health contest is open to babies of Monroe and vicinity between the age of six months and four years. The registration of babies, which is free, will continue all this week, and all parents wishing to enter their babies for the health examination have been requested by the committee in charge to register them this week at the Teflis Grotto headquarters, located at 335 DeSiard street. The registration hours are from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. The Griffin stuido will photograph all the babies, and the photograph of all babies entered in the contest will appear in the New-Star and World.

Robert Dean Barnes, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Barnes, 508 Louisville avenue; Dolores Arline Bare, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Bare, 617 Wood street; James Newton Baker, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. LAST OPEN FORUM MEETING WILL BE HELD MONDAY EVE

The last of a series of six open forum discussions sponsored by the Inter-church Youth council of the Twin Cities will be held at 7:30 o'clock tomorrow night at the First Methodist church annex, when the topic, "Russia, A Study of Communism," will be discussed.

Miss Sallie Humble, instructor of history at Neville high school, assisted by Alston Prophit, will have charge of the discussions, outlining the subject before the open forum debates are held.

No more of the open forum sessions will be held until late in the summer, Harris Tyson, Y. M. C. A. secretary, announced last night.

LEGIONNAIRES CELEBRATE 'POPPY SALE' YESTERDAY

"Poppy day" was staged in Monroe yesterday by members of the local Legion Auxiliary who sold these flowers on downtown street corners and in buildings, tagging the general public.

These flowers were fashioned by inmates of the Veterans' hospital in Alexandria. Their cost is three cents each and all money received in excess of this sum goes to the child welfare fund in Monroe.

The general chairman of the day's sales was Mrs. J. E. Lockwood.

MRS. JOHNSTON IS BURIED SATURDAY

Funeral Services Are Conducted at Monroe First Methodist Church

Funeral services for Mrs. J. W. Johnston, 71, were conducted at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the First Methodist church, Rev. W. C. Scott, assisted by the Rev. D. C. Barr, officiating. Burial was in Riverview burial park.

Honorary pallbearers were Dr. Byron Vaughan, Mose Hoffman, O. O. Clark. H. P. Marks, John Munholland, Herman McGuire, T. O. Brown, W. G. Graffe, Sig Masur, E. N. Faulk, E. Fudicker, and R. Downs.

Active pallbearers were L. J. Hart, O. B. Morton, Travis Oliver, John Breard, Robert Cann, Murray Hudson, and S. M. McReynolds.

Mrs. Johnston was the daughter of the late John Bishop and Phoebe Cordelia Benton. She was born at Delhi, July 21, 1861, and was married to Mr. Johnston on October 13, 1880, coming to Monroe to make her home.

Her husband, who was manager of the Ingleside plantation for many years, died several years ago.

arm, for instance, to stop growing, when it is just the right length.

We are truly "fearfully and wonderfully made."

WHILE ROCKEFELLER Institute scientists fight cancer with unborn mouse skin, scientists of the General Electric company at Schenectady find a way to send "a secret voice on a beam of light" from an airship to the ground. No enemy could pick up that message, as radio messages can be picked up. In war airships could send information to the earth in safety.

The light comes to a mirror on the ground, and a photo-electric cell "transforms the light-born frequencies into sound and voice," with sufficient energy to be sent broadcast.

CONGRESSMAN FULLER, of Arkansas, says every civil service employe should prove his ability to "sing, recite, or write from memory" the words of the Star-Spangled Banner. He must know them all by heart.

Does President Hoover know by heart all the words of that estimable song? Does Congressman Fuller know them? What percentage of the senate and house members know them?

A popular song says those words are known only to the Armenians and the Greeks.

THE STOCK MARKET heard that a powerful financial group, including Owen D. Young, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., Charles E. Mitchell, Walter C. Teagle, Clarence M. Wooley and others will undertake to start the flow of money through the arteries of business. At that news, the little stocks went up, soon as the exchange opened.

A little encouragement puts them up, but, alas, they go down so easily, and stay down so long. The London Times, says it's all our fault for accumulating so much gold.

PRESIDENT BUTLER, of Columbia university, says Jefferson's democratic party, and Lincoln's republican party are both dead, and if thoughtful people had a real leader to follow, they would "sweep our whole discredited political machinery into the dust heap."

Dr. Butler wants a third party.

Questions for Dr. Butler: First, how many "thoughtful people" are there?

Second, what good would a third party do among citizens 50 per cent of whom will not take the trouble to vote?

RUSSIA, NOT WILLING to be found unprepared if war comes, is training not only men but also women and children, in the use of firearms. In addition, millions of young Russians study aeronautics, in preparation for flying, and thousands are trained as actual fliers.

In Switzerland, every able-bodied man is taught to use a gun, possesses one, and, at intervals, must prove that it is in good working order, and that he stills knows how to use it.

Uncle Sam might train 20,000 or more young Americans as pilots, paying them for their time, summoning them once in so often to prove that they are still able to fly. We shall need pilots, some day.

ADVOCATES OF BIRTH CONTROL ask congress to legalize distribution of contraceptive information, at the first hearing since 1873, when birth control information was declared illegal.

Birth control could be made useful, if morons and semi-morons could be persuaded to use it, but they will not take the trouble, and the others, as a rule, have too few children, as it is.

Grammont streets, at 10:30 o'clock, preceding the services, to march to the church in a body.

Following the special services, Legionnaires will meet at the home of Charles Mitchell, 123 North Sixth street, going from there to decorate graves of all war veterans buried in Monroe cemeteries. They will leave the Mitchell home at 2:30 o'clock, it was announced.

Flowers for decorations will be made into wreaths by ladies of the American Legion auxiliary, as has been customary, it was announced, and the public is asked to cooperate by donating flowers to be made into wreaths for decorating purposes. The flowers can be taken to the Mitchell home, where they will be received by ladies of the auxiliary, it was announced.

Reverend Hastings announced last night his sermon would be "Did They Die in Vain?" or "Our Patriotism and the Problems of War; Will it Meet the Problems of Peace?" In his sermon, he announced, he will emphasize the importance of the problems now facing the American people as a crucial test, not unlike a war, and the importance of a patriotism which will meet the emergency successfully.

Erroneous announcement was made in The News-Star yesterday afternoon that the veterans' service would be held in the evening. The News-Star—World is glad to make this correction.

Monday, May 30, members of the Rodney J. Dobbs, post 1809, Veterans of Foreign Wars, will hold memorial services at Riverview burial park, at 10 o'clock, with Rev. Tom Roberts, pastor of the Farmerville First Baptist church, as the principal speaker. Other addresses are being scheduled, they announced.

All graves of war veterans in Monroe cemeteries will be decorated with flags and flowers, and graves of organization members will be decorated with the Malta Cross, organization insignia.

NEGRO SUSPECT NABBED

John Polk, alias "Fat Sam," 38-year-old negro living at 115 South Nineteenth street, was arrested by police last night and held in connection with the robbery of the Hello-World grocery store, 115 Breard street, last Monday night, when approximately $60 worth of goods were taken.

Groceries valued at $25, police said, were recovered from the attic of his home.

HILL'S FUNERAL IS TO BE HELD HERE

Committed Suicide Yesterday Morning by Leaping Off Traffic Bridge

Funeral services will be conducted at 4 o'clock this afternoon, at the home at 802 South Third street, West Monroe, for C. P. Hill, who committed suicide yesterday morning by leaping off the traffic bridge here into the Ouachita river. Rev. E. E. Huntsberry, pastor of the West Monroe First Baptist church, officiating. Burial will be in the Hosley cemetery.

Pallbearers will be O. L. Hoskins, W. A. Cooper, J. A. Mallury, V. W. Sehon, S. J. Daigle, and J. P. Thomasie.

His is survived by his widow and four children, his father and a brother. The children are Charles, 13; Norma Lee, 10; Carl Edwin, 7; James Clifton, 4. The father is Jack Hill of Aberdeen, Miss. The brother resides at Baton Rouge.

Hill drowned at 8:55 o'clock and his body was recovered at 10 o'clock by firemen and American Legion members. The body was taken from the river at a point opposite the rear of the Covington building, where it was discovered by use of drag-lines.

After being pulled into a motorboat, the body was taken down the river to an undertaking establishment located on South Grand street. Steve Daigle, employe of the telephone company, and Dr. J. H. Pakey, identified the body at the establishment.

Hill has been suffering ill health and was evidently despondent when he decided to drown himself. It was rumored that he was despondent because of having been "laid off" from his job, but this was said to be untrue. J. W. Warren, manager of the telephone company, said Hill had worked for the company for 15 years, and that his seniority in years of service assured him he would not be laid off. His salary was not subject to being cut, said Mr. Warren.

The drowned man had been taking his vacation. Yesterday morning he visited the telephone company's plant and told fellow workers he was a "sick man." About 8:15 o'clock he called at the Clinic and told an attendant he wanted attention from his family doctor. The doctor happened to be out of the building, and Hill said he would return.

Hill returned about 30 minutes later and told the attendant he was very ill. He requested a patient's room. The attendant walked up stairs to the second floor to make arrangements for a room, and to bring the elevator down to the first floor. When the attendant came down in the elevator, Hill had left the building.

Indications were that Hill walked directly to the bridge from the Clinic. The hands of his watch stopped their movement at two minutes before 9 o'clock, showing that a few minutes had elapsed between the time he left the Clinic and arrived at the bridge.

Hill's act in jumping off the bridge was witnessed by 10 or 12 people, some of whom were walking or riding across the bridge. Among the witnesses were S. A. Dickinson of Fondale, Ben Roselle, laundry truck driver. Fred Graff, 13-year-old boy, residing at 506 Coleman avenue, West Monroe, was rummaging on the east bank of the river near the bridge, and saw Hill wave his arms wildly in the water.

More Than 25 Babies Here Already Entered in Contest

Although registration has been in progress only two days, more than 25 babies had been entered Saturday in the Grotto "Better Baby" health contest, conducted by Teflis Grotto.

In addition to a thorough physical examination by baby specialists, assisted by nurses, 25 prizes will be awarded to the 25 most perfect babies in the contest.

A systematic and accurate health report will be made of every baby entered in the health contest. The examinations will be made from a regular health form of chart.

Questions will be asked relative to the baby's past health, and expert advice will be given parents relative to the baby's diet, the bath, clothing, rest, sleep and airing. After the examinations are completed the health charts showing the exact health status of each baby will be returned to the parents. The Grotto "Better Baby" health contest is open to babies of Monroe and vicinity between the age of six months and four years. The registration of babies, which is free, will continue all this week, and all parents wishing to enter their babies for the health examination have been requested by the committee in charge to register them this week at the Teflis Grotto headquarters, located at 335 DeSiard street. The registration hours are from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. The Griffin stuido will photograph all the babies, and the photograph of all babies entered in the contest will appear in the New-Star and World.

LAST OPEN FORUM MEETING WILL BE HELD MONDAY EVE

The last of a series of six open forum discussions sponsored by the Inter-church Youth council of the Twin Cities will be held at 7:30 o'clock tomorrow night at the First Methodist church annex, when the topic, "Russia, A Study of Communism," will be discussed.

Miss Sallie Humble, instructor of history at Neville high school, assisted by Alston Prophit, will have charge of the discussions, outlining the subject before the open forum debates are held.

No more of the open forum sessions will be held until late in the summer, Harris Tyson, Y. M. C. A. secretary, announced last night.

LEGIONNAIRES CELEBRATE 'POPPY SALE' YESTERDAY

"Poppy day" was staged in Monroe yesterday by members of the local Legion Auxiliary who sold these flowers on downtown street corners and in buildings, tagging the general public.

These flowers were fashioned by inmates of the Veterans' hospital in Alexandria. Their cost is three cents each and all money received in excess of this sum goes to the child welfare fund in Monroe.

The general chairman of the day's sales was Mrs. J. E. Lockwood.

MRS. JOHNSTON IS BURIED SATURDAY

Funeral Services Are Conducted at Monroe First Methodist Church

Funeral services for Mrs. J. W. Johnston, 71, were conducted at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the First Methodist church, Rev. W. C. Scott, assisted by the Rev. D. C. Barr, officiating. Burial was in Riverview burial park.

Honorary pallbearers were Dr. Byron Vaughan, Mose Hoffman, O. O. Clark, H. P. Marks, John Munholland, Herman McGuire, T. O. Brown, W. G. Graffe, Sig Masur, E. N. Faulk, E. Fudicker, and R. Downs.

Active pallbearers were L. J. Hart, O. B. Morton, Travis Oliver, John Breard, Robert Cann, Murray Hudson, and S. M. McReynolds.

Mrs. Johnston was the daughter of the late John Bishop and Phoebe Cordelia Benton. She was born at Delhi, July 21, 1861, and was married to Mr. Johnston on October 13, 1880, coming to Monroe to make her home.

Her husband, who was manager of the Ingleside plantation for many years, died several years ago.

TAX PAYERS BEGIN TO AWAKE

Eight hundred property owners stormed the Memphis city hall a few days ago, demanding that the city tax rate be cut from $2.16 to $2 and presenting the conclusions of their experts that the city could do its job on that much money. If the results of other "tax payers' strikes" are any criterion, the Memphis citizens may win their battle.

Another instance of the effectiveness of organized public action in reducing taxation was furnished last winter in Kentucky. Several thousand merchants, large and small, their employes and representatives, descended upon the capital at Frankfort, swarming all over the building and even manhandling the governor's mansion in their wrath, and they frightened the lawmakers into an immediate capitulation. Right or wrong, they were against the sales tax bill—and they had their way. From the moment of their appearance, the governor's sales tax bill was a dead letter. The threat of votes—not only the merchants' votes, but the votes of thousands of customers the merchants can influence—was too much for legislators.

The Kentucky incident was one of a number which have been occuring the country over. Fifteen thousand tax payers met in Independence Square, Philadelphia, to protest against tax increases; 4000 citizens of Little York, Pa., aired their grievances in a public demonstration, and in Minnesota farmers and others in a score of counties stormed the courthouses and worked their will with frightened commissioners. The Minnesota achievement, brought about by organization of tax payers, resulted in slashing of an amazing total of $7,800,000 from local tax levies. It followed the increase by the 1931 legislature of the state levy on general property and the drafting of an income tax amendment. Probably the 1933 Minnesota legislature will learn what those "embattled farmers" are capable of doing.

The awakening of the tax payer from his long sleep is a good sign. Hitherto, popular movements for corrections of governmental laxness, extravagance and inefficiency have not always been successful—rarely so, unless in the guise of a political party movement. Aroused tax payers, however, do not care about party or politics. They demand economy.

A PAGE OF HUMAN INTEREST

There may be those to whom no printed page looks less attractive than a page of classified advertisements, yet such a page is full of human interest. It is a homey page.

If you are going to build, sites are listed there, and if you prefer to buy a home, you turn to the classified page to learn what is on sale. Excellent used furniture for the new home is sought in an adjacent column, and when the first baby comes another section is scanned for the carriage, crib and other nursery fixtures. Even the family car may come through the same medium. There, also, can be read the emotions of the jobless or ambitious, of the little owner of a "lost, strayed or stolen" pet and of the poor widow who has dropped her purse with her meager savings.

There is real human interest in looking over long columns of these brief classified advertisements, and an interest much broader than that of those who turn to these columns for cold business reasons. Those who come to scoff often remain to pray.

Comedy, tragedy, drama and homely humor are to be found sprinkled in satisfying portions among the wanted, for rent, for sale, employment, and lost and found ads of your family newspaper.

ONLY THE STRONG—

The death of the two scientists on the high slopes of Mount McKinley is a tragic reminder that the climbing of lofty mountains is one of the most perilous sports that the world offers to adventuresome men.

It isn't a sport that draws a great many adherents, since most of us do not live close enough to high mountain peaks to be able to indulge in it. But in all countries—in the United States, in England, in Germany, in Canada and elsewhere—there are little groups of men to whom mountain-climbing is the sport of sports.

To climb far above timberline, drained of bodily strength by the rarefied air, hewing paths out of solid ice, crossing glacier crevasses on bridges of snow and struggling up an unblazed trail to heights that only two or three other human beings have ever visited—it is a thrilling and venturesome game. Only the strong dare attempt it.

Curious Rules in Congress

By RODNEY DUTCHER
(NEA Service Writer)

WASHINGTON.—Angry utterances, perhaps induced mainly by election worries, and frayed nerves, are frequent in congress during these days of strife and strain.

But members sometimes find themselves hampered to the point of exasperation. Formal rules are invoked to prevent them from calling each other hasty names and, despite their immunity from the legal consequences of anything they say on the floor, the dictates of expediency are even forcing them to moderate the language they use toward ordinary citizens.

* * *

Witness the unhappy plight of Senator Huey Long, the Louisiana "kingfish," who was told that he couldn't say Senator Joe Robinson of Arkansas, his own party's floor leader, was influenced in his votes by his corporation law clients.

They pulled Paragraph Two of Rule XIX on Huey, reading as follows: "No senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another senator or to other senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a senator."

That's a funny rule in more ways than one, but Huey had to sit down until someone—it was John Blaine of Wisconsin—made a special motion allowing him to resume.

* * *

Meanwhile, Congressman Fiorello H. LaGuardia, the New York insurgent, was being asked to expunge from a committee record the word "contemptible" which he had applied to President E. L. Cord of the Century Air Lines in connection with a pilots' strike following pay cuts.

Chairman Sam Rayburn of the house interstate commerce committee begged LaGuardia to strike out the "harsh word" because, he said, when another gent had been similarly criticized previously "the committee had to hear him for two days." That seems to be the citizen's flat method of retaliation at attacks from congress.

But what really creates complicated commission is a razzberry tossed by a representative at a senator, or vice versa. One calls attention to the recent exchange of punts between the peppery little Senator Carter Glass of Virginia and the ex-prizefighting congressman, Fred Britten of Illinois.

* * *

The house sputtered in anger when Glass charged that some Chicago bankers had hired one of its members to oppose branch banking provisions of the McFadden bill some years ago.

But it spent half an hour arguing whether Britten could be permitted to quote the Glass charges from the Congressional Record or even make any specific reference to them.

Browning of Tennessee, who was in the chair, cited a ruling that no member of the house might in any way reflect on anything a senator or the senate said or did. He ruled that this prevented a member reading from anything that went into the Record from the senate, that if a senator called a member of the house a thief the speech mustn't be referred to in the house, that if a senator accused every house member of taking bribes the representative could not call the slander to the country's attention from the floor.

* * *

The theory of such rulings, as promulgated by the late Speaker Longworth, is that friendly relations between the two branches and their members must be "enforced with the utmost rigidity."

So Britten denounced the Glass charges simply as something he had read in the newspapers. Shafer of Wisconsin asked him if he were "criticizing newspapermen for correctly reporting a statement made on the floor of a supposedly great legislative body by a politician who holds public office," whereupon the house applauded and Britten apologized to—or, rather, eulogized—the newspapers.

Obviously, such circumlocutions hamper a man who wants to say what he thinks. But Britten referred to the Glass charges as a "dastardly lie"—and he couldn't have got away with that had he been admittedly talking about a senator.

As sort of a capping of the climax, still further accentuating the difficulties of congressional name-calling, Britten took the two words "dastardly lie" out of the Record, substituting the words "not the truth." Glass, meanwhile, had said he could prove the charge, that the culprit was dead, that he would produce proof if Britten or any other member cared to take responsibility for making him do so. That seems to have been the end of that.

Can Trade Pump be Primed?

(Editorial from the Christian Science Monitor).

How is business going to get started again on the upgrade? Will that mysterious "business cycle" rise again naturally after it has "touched bottom?" Or must governments and individuals give it an upward push? And what kind of a push will be effective? Those questions are close to the surface in every discussion of the present economic situation. More and more, as the period of stress has been prolonged, opinion has swung to the belief that a push or pushes would help—and can be given.

The gigantic relief proposals put forward in the last few days by Senator Robinson of Arkansas and President Hoover are expressions of this belief. While both provide for loans to aid agriculture and for advances to states to relieve unemployment, the core of each is a plan for federal financing of construction projects which would give men work—and wages with which to start a buying movement.

Many economists have declared that only a vigorous stimulation of purchasing power can soon reverse the course of business which has been following this vicious circle; decline in buying—curtailed production—lower wages and unemployment—a further check on buying. And they ask government to give the first and biggest push.

Early in the present session of congress, Senator LaFollette urged a $5,500,000,000 bond issue to build public works. Later, Senators Costigan and Bulkley joined him in a more moderate proposal, and former Governor Smith came out for something of the same kind. Serious objections were raised to those measures, chiefly on the ground that the issuance of more bonds would depreciate federal securities held as backlog by many banks which were then in a shaky position.

Success of the Reconstruction Finance corporation and the federal reserve system and the Glass-Steagall act in strengthening the banks have extracted most of the vitality from that objection. And other objections are removed by the insistence of both Mr. Robinson and Mr. Hoover upon a balanced budget as a prerequisite to their programs. Moreover, both plans contemplate federal financing of "self-liquidating" projects, such as toll bridges or tunnels, and possibly model housing to supplant slums.

Mr. Robinson further safeguards his scheme by providing for amortization of the debt through special taxes. His plan calls for a $2,000,000,000 bond issue, while the president would have $1,100,000,000 furnished by the Reconstruction Finance corporation for construction work.

It is argued in behalf of these proposals that many needed projects which would pay for themselves could be completed at present low costs while providing employment for 1,000,000 men and giving a decisive impetus to business recovery by swelling the reservoir of buying power. It is pointed out that construction of public works would not compete with other business, and that it would produce buying power without at the same time increasing the output of goods which can find no market.

The Robinson and Hoover plans are so much alike in essentials that there is hope of getting nonpartisan agreement on a compromise. In view of the fact that the decline in wage earners' buying power has been estimated at $18,000,000,000 while the annual national income is around $70,000,000,000, it may be argued that one or two billions is hardly a drop in the bucket. But they might provide just the drop needed to prime the pump of business recovery.

The time seems ripe for trying something of the kind. Certainly it would be far better for the government to provide employment on useful projects than to give the same money away as alms for the unemployed, and that is a very possible alternative.

Howe About Everything

By E. W. HOWE

Every little while I encounter the statement in American print that 73 per cent of citizens die, as paupers; if not in the poor house, then as helpless burdens on grumbling relatives.

It is a disgraceful charge to make in a country as good as this. How near true is it? And how much of the blame attaches to the unhappy 73 per cent?

The other day I attended the funeral of a man I had known some years. For six months he had been a charity patient at a public institution (and a very unpopular one, as he had an ugly temper.) For 30 years he had a salary never below $40 a week, and light and pleasant work, yet was never a week ahead of the hounds. Within a year of his death he took a long trip on borrowed money, in an automobile the mortgage took after the funeral. Mortgages also emptied his house of all the furniture worth anything. I have known him to give "parties" on money he should and might have saved to pay his funeral expenses.

He jazzed his music, his job, his life. He might have owned a shop of his own 30 years ago, but was always expecting a "raise" when a reduction was steadily more probable.

It is not an unusual case; the disturbing figures quoted may not be too high.

I know an old fellow who, disposed to do his duty to the unemployed the past winter, hired an automobile driver he did not need, because the fellow had a wife and two children.

In one night the man stole a car, held up a filling station, and married a street walker, and is now in jail at the expense of over-burdened taxpayers. Before the state is through with him—trial, rehearing, deputies to take him to prison, officers to guard and feed him, chaplains to pray for him—his cost to the public will be several thousand dollars more.

It is a sordid tale, but true. What was in that man's brain cavity? Did his parents spoil him, or was it the help howling in publications and conventions, and everybody saying that civilization is a failure?

The better elements among the Russian people knew for hundreds of years before the revolution that their government was bad; not as good as it might have been easily made. Had the best citizens insisted on good government—the greatest good for the greatest number; there is nothing better than this—there would have been no Russian revolution. . . . The present disturbance in the United States is due to the same cause: the better elements have neglected to insist on the best government possible. . . . But the old government in Russia was better than what the radicals are giving the people now—as our old government was better than what the radicals are offering.

One who works under the constant direction of a foreman may get along in a fashion without common sense, but a man who is his own boss (as doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief) must have common sense, or he will drop many monkey wrenches in the delicate machinery he is called upon to handle.

A traveler says that when an American picture play is presented in Germany, the lingering kisses, the bravery of the western heroes, the nobleness of the heroines, attract whistling from those in the audience. . . . The Germans are making fun of us. . . . Have we not reached an age when we should recover from some of the conspicuous follies which attract contemptuous criticism in older countries claiming to be civilized?

I lately attended a luncheon at which was served wine from one of the most celebrated cellars in this country. (H. L. Mencken would have written a pean in its honor.) . . . Those present said it would not hurt me. . . . It did; there is no good liquor.

In the United States 2290 banks failed in 1931: an average of more than seven for every business day of the year. During the same period there was not a single bank failure in Canada, nor has there been a bank failure in Canada in a long term of years.

From the representative American city of Detroit one can almost throw a stone into Canada: Same climate, same soil, same everything, except than on the Detroit side of the river the American spirit dominates.

I have blushed lately in presence of a statement that Americans have bad and foolish habits almost or entirely unknown in other countries claiming to be civilized. Is this due to what we call the American spirit, which we have built up so laboriously, and of which we have been so proud? And is it our first duty to reform this American spirit? At places it is dangerously weak; at others enormously vulgar. Must we admit this before we can hope to do better? It is often said the children in a family are "spoilt." Likewise the people of a nation may be spoilt, or badly brought up. I think this is the trouble with the American people; like spoilt children, they kick the shins of their own institutions, and hold their breath, and scream, and annoy not only the neighbors, but the people of other nations.

I know a stout young man with excellent natural intellectual equipment who for twenty years has been a contemptible scoundrel in all his relations with his mother.

He reduced her to poverty, and she went to work, but he refused to; he lives off her work, and is mean to her. He is a disreputable loafer, yet the women say "there is nothing vicious about the boy," and rather like him:

They even severely criticise his mother for "spoiling" him, although she has done nothing except love him, and coax him with tears in her eyes to behave himself.

I lately met a man and wife, and both had excellent sense, manners and ability. . . . I noted that those who met them said: "It is remarkable; usually one or the other doesn't amount to anything."

Great men are largely those who have managed to do a good deal of work at odd times while greatly bothered with love affairs.

Ibsen had a bad start: at eighteen he had a serious affair with a hired girl, and came near going to the devil before she had her child were disposed of, but Ibsen managed to survive, in a way.

The great Goethe had fourteen great worries in his life, and was often in complete despair, but at last left much to his credit. All the great have staggered along in the same way; so worried by women they had little time left for anything else.

As it is, always has been, and always will be, there have been some quite remarkable men; perhaps it is idle to speculate upon what greater things they might accomplish if less hampered with love.

Some of these days you will realize that you have managed your affairs badly all your life. Why not admit your weakness as early as possible, and endeavor to do better? This is the soundest advice one fool man can give another.

Washington Day Letter

By RODNEY DUTCHER
(NEA Service Writer)

WASHINGTON—Well, they finally got the name of Porto Rico changed to Puerto Rico, but it was a nerve-wracking experience for Mr. Jose Pesquera, the resident Porto—beg pardon, Puerto—Rican commissioner here.

Mr. Pesquera is quite new in Washington. It was a great day for him. He delivered his maiden speech. It was also a great day for the house committee on insular affairs, which was having its first calendar Wednesday in 10 long years.

The committee brought in the bill to change the name of Mr. Pesquera's home land to Puerto Rico, as the Porto or Puerto Ricans have been calling it themselves these many years in accordance with correct Spanish orthography.

* * *

What Pesquera Heard.

Mr. Pesquera at once found the chair awarding an hour's time to a congressman named Stafford from Wisconsin. The Puerto Rican measure was the only thing before the house, but the next thing Mr. Pesquera observed was that Stafford was allowing time for speeches more or less indiscriminately.

First a Virginia congressman took 10 minutes to make fun of a couple of members who had inserted almost identical farm relief speeches into the Record as their own product.

He warned that it had come to be "dangerous for a member to go out in the open market and buy a good speech."

* * *

Puerto and Britten.

An Arkansas member demanded to know whether the house was going to take up a whole hour on the Puerto Rico issue and a prolonged argument broke out as to whether Britten of Illinois could make a speech defending the honesty of congress. Britten did. By the time he was through Mr. Pesquera found a gentleman from Illinois wading into a 10-minute attack on the American press for accepting President Hoover's charge that congress wasn't making vast economies.

Blanton of Texas, after making a phoney motion to strike out two or three unimportant words of the resolution, led a 20-minute wrangle in which he demanded elimination of most of the 876 lawyers attached to the veterans' bureau as well as many other "useless" federal attorneys.

They got talking about Albert B. Fall, military court-martials and the fact that "a couple of learned doctors from the department of agriculture are now down in Chile looking for wild potatoes while potatoes in this country are selling for 10 cents a bushel."

* * *

"Good of the Union."

Parks of Arkansas demanded whether "this is a bill to change the spelling of the name of Porto Rico" and Blanton informed him that it was, "but we have been indulging in general debate on the good of the union." Next came a speech and plenty of debate about crippling the army by federal economy.

* * *

Three Minutes.

Finally, to what must have been the enormous relief of little Mr. Pesquera, the members seemed to be winded. Parks and Johnson of Washington said in effect that the resolution was a trivial, sentimental measure, and Osias of the Philippines retorted that national sentiment was tremendously important, that an official change to Puerto Rico would win "eternal gratitude" to this country from a whole people.

Stafford then graciously gave Mr. Pesquera three minutes for his maiden effort. A wistful thing it was.

The name Puerto Rico meant everything to 1,500,000 Puerto Ricans, he said, as "the first little piece of ribbon with which a mother ties the hair of her daughter, of little importance in itself, means everything to the mother." That little ribbon must not be torn away!

* *

Good American Porto.

Stafford argued that Porto Rico was a good old American name—and why give it a Spanish name simply because the Porto Rican legislature asked for one? Also it would cost money.

Then Stafford attempted to demonstrate that "Porto" was good Spanish and Lozier showed him he was only proving that it was good Portuguese, whereupon Stafford began to talk about "mules, mule whisky, and foul moonshine" in Lozier's home state of Missouri and the house voted 88 to 31 to change Porto Rico to Puerto Rico.

Mr. Pesquera, having participated in the weighty deliberations of one of the world's greatest legislative bodies, went home beaming.

RECREATION DEPARTMENT HAS BUSY WEEK PLANNED

The local recreation department has a busy week ahead with meetings slated for its playground leadership group on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Dr. B. M. McKoin will talk at 7 p.m. Monday at St. Francis sanitarium auditorium on "First Aid for Playground Workers." At 8 o'clock the group is to go to Temple B'Nai Israel annex where a meeting of community players is slated.

On Wednesday at 7 p.m. a meeting is slated in the auditorium of the St. Francis after which a meeting is to be held in the Camp Fire rooms.

On Saturday next at 5:30 o'clock Miss Armandine Renaud will talk on "Dancing and Its Place on the Playground." At 6 p.m. President C. C. Colvert, of the junior college, is to talk to the group.

What Today Means to You

"GEMINI"

If May 22nd is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m., from 3:30 p.m. to 4:50 p.m. and from 8:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. The danger periods are from noon to 1:35 p.m. and from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

An at home Sunday would be an astrologer's advice for May 22nd preparatory to an unusually strenuous week ahead. No adverse indications for the day, and a maximum of good will be derived from whatever source you seek pleasure, rest or comfort.

Children born on this May 22nd will have independent and forceful temperaments, combined with more than average vitality. Parents should strive to direct this vitality into constructive channels, for without some natural outlet, these children are apt to become restless and irritable. They will be quick, and ready-witted, a trifle brusque in manner, but will make excellent companions.

Born on May 22nd, you are generous and kind-hearted to a fault. You readily forgive in others what they would quickly condemn in you, yet, this unselfish and warm-hearted attitude wins for you many a dear and loyal friend. You are very much alive and vital to the joys of living, and even small every-day happenings enlist your interest and sympathy. You are sensitive and imaginative in your dealings with others—their troubles sadden you; in their joys, you find happiness. You are inclined to underrate your own ability and to overrate the ability of others. You often let chances go by, not feeling yourself quite up to the mark, whereas, in truth, you are more than capable and by your adaptability are equal to any situation.

You should cultivate more ambition and self-confidence, and give your talents a chance for growth. You are sitting in a back seat from choice and not from necessity. You need have less fear of the limelights than most people. There is something delightfully charming about your shyness, but, nevertheless, it is a detriment to you in the business side of life. All children make an appeal to you through your maternal or paternal instinct, as the case may be, and with a sympathetic mate, your home life should be ideal.

Successful People Born on May 22nd:

ALL MEN'S BIBLE CLASSES ARE TO HOLD JOINT MEET

All men's Bible classes from the churches of the Twin Cities are to meet in a union service on May 29 at the Paramount theater. This announcement was made Saturday morning following a conference held with representatives of the various organizations.

This action is taken to permit the members to hear Rev. Frank Tripp, former pastor of the First Baptist church, this city, and now pastor of the First Baptist church in St. Joseph, Mo., who will talk to the classes.

Reverend Tripp comes to Monroe to deliver the commencement address to the Ouachita parish high graduating class on the night of Friday, May 27.

TAX PAYERS BEGIN TO AWAKE

Eight hundred property owners stormed the Memphis city hall a few days ago, demanding that the city tax rate be cut from $2.16 to $2 and presenting the conclusions of their experts that the city could do its job on that much money. If the results of other "tax payers' strikes" are any criterion, the Memphis citizens may win their battle.

Another instance of the effectiveness of organized public action in reducing taxation was furnished last winter in Kentucky. Several thousand merchants, large and small, their employes and representatives, descended upon the capital at Frankfort, swarming all over the building and even manhandling the governor's mansion in their wrath, and they frightened the lawmakers into an immediate capitulation. Right or wrong, they were against the sales tax bill—and they had their way. From the moment of their appearance, the governor's sales tax bill was a dead letter. The threat of votes—not only the merchants' votes, but the votes of thousands of customers the merchants can influence—was too much for legislators.

The Kentucky incident was one of a number which have been occuring the country over. Fifteen thousand tax payers met in Independence Square, Philadelphia, to protest against tax increases; 4000 citizens of Little York, Pa., aired their grievances in a public demonstration, and in Minnesota farmers and others in a score of counties stormed the courthouses and worked their will with frightened commissioners. The Minnesota achievement, brought about by organization of tax payers, resulted in slashing of an amazing total of $7,800,000 from local tax levies. It followed the increase by the 1931 legislature of the state levy on general property and the drafting of an income tax amendment. Probably the 1933 Minnesota legislature will learn what these "embattled farmers" are capable of doing.

The awakening of the tax payer from his long sleep is a good sign. Hitherto, popular movements for corrections of governmental laxness, extravagance and inefficiency have not always been successful—rarely so, unless in the guise of a political party movement. Aroused tax payers, however, do not care about party or politics. They demand economy.

Curious Rules in Congress

By RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON.—Angry utterances, perhaps induced mainly by election worries, and frayed nerves, are frequent in congress during these days of strife and strain.

But members sometimes find themselves hampered to the point of exasperation. Formal rules are invoked to prevent them from calling each other hasty names and, despite their immunity from the legal consequences of anything they say on the floor, the dictates of expediency are even forcing them to moderate the language they use toward ordinary citizens.

The theory of such rulings, as promulgated by the late Speaker Longworth, is that friendly relations between the two branches and their members must be "enforced with the utmost rigidity."

So Britten denounced the Glass charges simply as something he had read in the newspapers. Shafer of Wisconsin asked him if he were "criticizing newspapermen for correctly reporting a statement made on the floor of a supposedly great legislative body by a politician who holds public office," whereupon the house applauded and Britten apologized to—or, rather, eulogized—the newspapers.

Obviously, such circumlocutions hamper a man who wants to say what he thinks. But Britten referred to the Glass charges as a "dastardly lie"—and he couldn't have got away with that had he been admittedly talking about a senator.

As sort of a capping of the climax, still further accentuating the difficulties of congressional name-calling, Britten took the two words "dastardly lie" out of the Record, substituting the words "not the truth." Glass, meanwhile, had said he could prove the charge, that the culprit was dead, that he would produce proof if Britten or any other member cared to take responsibility for making him do so. That seems to have been the end of that.

Can Trade Pump be Primed?

(Editorial from the Christian Science Monitor).

How is business going to get started again on the upgrade? Will that mysterious "business cycle" rise again naturally after it has "touched bottom?" Or must governments and individuals give it an upward push? And what kind of a push will be effective? Those questions are close to the surface in every discussion of the present economic situation. More and more, as the period of stress has been prolonged, opinion has swung to the belief that a push or pushes would help—and can be given.

The gigantic relief proposals put forward in the last few days by Senator Robinson of Arkansas and President Hoover are expressions of this belief. While both provide for loans to aid agriculture and for advances to states to relieve unemployment, the core of each is a plan for federal financing of construction projects which would give men work—and wages with which to start a buying movement.

Many economists have declared that only a vigorous stimulation of purchasing power can soon reverse the course of business which has been following this vicious circle; decline in buying—curtailed production—lower wages and unemployment—a further check on buying. And they ask government to give the first and biggest push.

Early in the present session of congress, Senator LaFollette urged a $5,500,000,000 bond issue to build public works. Later, Senators Costigan and Bulkley joined him in a more moderate proposal, and former Governor Smith came out for something of the same kind. Serious objections were raised to those measures, chiefly on the ground that the issuance of more bonds would depreciate federal securities held as backlog by many banks which were then in a shaky position.

Success of the Reconstruction Finance corporation and the federal reserve system and the Glass-Steagall act in strengthening the banks have extracted most of the vitality from that objection. And other objections are removed by the insistence of both Mr. Robinson and Mr. Hoover upon a balanced budget as a prerequisite to their programs. Moreover, both plans contemplate federal financing of "self-liquidating" projects, such as toll bridges or tunnels, and possibly model housing to supplant slums.

Mr. Robinson further safeguards his scheme by providing for amortization of the debt through special taxes. His plan calls for a $2,000,000,000 bond issue, while the president would have $1,160,000,000 furnished by the Reconstruction Finance corporation for construction work.

It is argued in behalf of these proposals that many needed projects which would pay for themselves could be completed at present low costs while providing employment for 1,000,000 men and giving a decisive impetus to business recovery by swelling the reservoir of buying power. It is pointed out that construction of public works would not compete with other business, and that it would produce buying power without at the same time increasing the output of goods which can find no market.

The Robinson and Hoover plans are so much alike in essentials that there is hope of getting nonpartisan agreement on a compromise. In view of the fact that the decline in wage earners' buying power has been estimated at $18,000,000,000 while the annual national income is around $70,000,000,000, it may be argued that one or two millions is hardly a drop in the bucket. But they might provide just the drop needed to prime the pump of business recovery.

The time seems ripe for trying something of the kind. Certainly it would be far better for the government to provide employment on useful projects than to give the same money away as alms for the unemployed, and that is a very possible alternative.

Howe About Everything

By E. W. HOWE

Every little while I encounter the statement in American print that 73 per cent of citizens die, as paupers; if not in the poor house, then as helpless burdens on grumbling relatives. It is a disgraceful charge to make in a country as good as this. How near true is it? And how much of the blame attaches to the unhappy 73 per cent?

The other day I attended the funeral of a man I had known some years. For six months he had been a charity patient at a public institution (and a very unpopular one, as he had an ugly temper.) For 30 years he had a salary never below $40 a week, and light and pleasant work, yet was never a week ahead of the hounds. Within a year of his death he took a long trip on borrowed money, in an automobile the mortgage took after the funeral. Mortgages also emptied his house of all the furniture worth anything. I have known him to give "parties" on money he should and might have saved to pay his funeral expenses.

He jazzed his music, his job, his life. He might have owned a shop of his own 30 years ago, but was always expecting a "raise" when a reduction was steadily more probable.

It is not an unusual case; the disturbing figures quoted may not be too high.

I know an old fellow who, disposed to do his duty to the unemployed the past winter, hired an automobile driver he did not need, because the fellow had a wife and two children.

In one night the man stole a car, held up a filling station, and married a street walker, and is now in jail at the expense of over-burdened tax-payers. Before the state is through with him—trial, rehearing, deputies to take him to prison, officers to guard and feed him, chaplains to pray for him—his cost to the public will be several thousand dollars more.

It is a sordid tale, but true. What was in that man's brain cavity? Did his parents spoil him, or was it the help howling in publications and conventions, and everybody saying that civilization is a failure?

The better elements among the Russian people knew for hundreds of years before the revolution that their government was bad; not as good as it might have been easily made. Had the best citizens insisted on good government—the greatest good for the greatest number; there is nothing better than this—there would have been no Russian revolution. . . . The present disturbance in the United States is due to the same cause: the better elements have neglected to insist on the best government possible. . . . But the old government in Russia was better than what the radicals are giving the people now—as our old government was better than what the radicals are offering.

One who works under the constant direction of a foreman may get along in a fashion without common sense, but a man who is his own boss (as doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief) must have common sense, or he will drop many monkey wrenches in the delicate machinery he is called upon to handle.

A traveler says that when an American picture play is presented in Germany, the lingering kisses, the bravery of the western heroes, the nobleness of the heroines, attract whistling from those in the audience. . . . The Germans are making fun of us. . . . Have we not reached an age when we should recover from some of the conspicuous follies which attract contemptuous criticism in older countries claiming to be civilized?

I lately attended a luncheon at which was served wine from one of the most celebrated cellars in this country. (H. L. Mencken would have written a pean in its honor.) . . . Those present said it would not hurt me. . . . It did; there is no good liquor.

In the United States 2290 banks failed in 1931; an average of more than seven for every business day of the year. During the same period there was not a single bank failure in Canada, nor has there been a bank failure in Canada in a long term of years.

From the representative American city of Detroit one can almost throw a stone into Canada: Same climate, same soil, same everything, except than on the Detroit side of the river the American spirit dominates.

I have blushed lately in presence of a statement that Americans have bad and foolish habits almost or entirely unknown in other countries claiming to be civilized. Is this due to what we call the American spirit, which we have built up so laboriously, and of which we have been so proud? And is it our first duty to reform this American spirit? At places it is dangerously weak; at others enormously vulgar. Must we admit this before we can hope to do better? It is often said the children in a family are "spoilt." Likewise the people of a nation may be spoilt, or badly brought up. I think this is the trouble with the American people: like spoilt children, they kick the shins of their own institutions, and hold their breath, and scream, and annoy not only the neighbors, but the people of other nations.

I know a stout young man with excellent natural intellectual equipment who for twenty years has been a contemptible scoundrel in all his relations with his mother.

He reduced her to poverty, and she went to work, but he refused to; he lives off her work, and is mean to her. He is a disreputable loafer, yet the women say "there is nothing vicious about the boy," and rather like him:

They even severely criticise his mother for "spoiling" him, although she has done nothing except love him, and coax him with tears in her eyes to behave himself.

I lately met a man and wife, and both had excellent sense, manners and ability. . . . I noted that those who met them said: "It is remarkable; usually one or the other doesn't amount to anything."

Great men are largely those who have managed to do a good deal of work at odd times while greatly bothered with love affairs.

Ibsen had a bad start: at eighteen he had a serious affair with a hired girl, and came near going to the devil before she had her child were disposed of, but Ibsen managed to survive, in a way.

The great Goethe had fourteen great worries in his life, and was often in complete despair, but at last left much to his credit. All the great have staggered along in the same way; so worried by women they had little time left for anything else.

As it is, always has been, and always will be, there have been some quite remarkable men; perhaps it is idle to speculate upon what greater things they might accomplish if less hampered with love.

Some of these days you will realize that you have managed your affairs badly all your life. Why not admit your weakness as early as possible, and endeavor to do better? This is the soundest advice one fool man can give another.

Washington Day Letter

By RODNEY DUTCHER
(NEA Service Writer)

WASHINGTON—Well, they finally got the name of Porto Rico changed to Puerto Rico, but it was a nerve-wracking experience for Mr. Jose Pesquera, the resident Porto—beg pardon, Puerto—Rican commissioner here.

Mr. Pesquera is quite new in Washington. It was a great day for him. He delivered his maiden speech. It was also a great day for the house committee on insular affairs, which was having its first calendar Wednesday in 10 long years.

The committee brought in the bill to change the name of Mr. Pesquera's home land to Puerto Rico, as the Porto or Puerto Ricans have been calling it themselves these many years in accordance with correct Spanish orthography.

* * *

What Pesquera Heard.

Mr. Pesquera at once found the chair awarding an hour's time to a congressman named Stafford from Wisconsin. The Puerto Rican measure was the only thing before the house, but the next thing Mr. Pesquera observed was that Stafford was allowing time for speeches more or less indiscriminately.

First a Virginia congressman took 10 minutes to make fun of a couple of members who had inserted almost identical farm relief speeches into the Record as their own product.

He warned that it had come to be "dangerous for a member to go out in the open market and buy a good speech."

* * *

Puerto and Britten.

An Arkansas member demanded to know whether the house was going to take up a whole hour on the Puerto Rico issue and a prolonged argument broke out as to whether Britten of Illinois could make a speech defending the honesty of congress. Britten did. By the time he was through Mr. Pesquera found a gentleman from Illinois wading into a 10-minute attack on the American press for accepting President Hoover's charge that congress wasn't making vast economies.

Blanton of Texas, after making a phoney motion to strike out two or three unimportant words of the resolution, led a 20-minute wrangle in which he demanded elimination of most of the 876 lawyers attached to the veterans' bureau as well as many other "useless" federal attorneys.

They got talking about Albert B. Fall, military court-martials and the fact that "a couple of learned doctors from the department of agriculture are now down in Chile looking for wild potatoes while potatoes in this country are selling for 10 cents a bushel."

* * *

"Good of the Union."

Parks of Arkansas demanded whether "this is a bill to change the spelling of the name of Porto Rico" and Blanton informed him that it was, "but we have been indulging in general debate on the good of the union." Next came a speech and plenty of debate about crippling the army by federal economy.

* * *

Three Minutes.

Finally, to what must have been the enormous relief of little Mr. Pesquera, the members seemed to be winded. Parks and Johnson of Washington said in effect that the resolution was a trivial, sentimental measure, and Osias of the Philippines retorted that national sentiment was tremendously important, that an official change to Puerto Rico would win "eternal gratitude" to this country from a whole people.

Stafford then graciously gave Mr. Pesquera three minutes for his maiden effort. A wistful thing it was.

The name Puerto Rico meant everything to 1,500,000 Puerto Ricans, he said, as "the first little piece of ribbon with which a mother ties the hair of her daughter, of little importance in itself, means everything to the mother." That little ribbon must not be torn away!

* *

Good American Porto.

Stafford argued that Porto Rico was a good old American name—and why give it a Spanish name simply because the Porto Rican legislature asked for one? Also it would cost money.

Then Stafford attempted to demonstrate that "Porto" was good Spanish and Lozier showed him he was only proving that it was good Portuguese, whereupon Stafford began to talk about "mules, mule whisky, and foul moonshine" in Lozier's home state of Missouri and the house voted 88 to 31 to change Porto Rico to Puerto Rico.

Mr. Pesquera, having participated in the weighty deliberations of one of the world's greatest legislative bodies, went home beaming.

RECREATION DEPARTMENT HAS BUSY WEEK PLANNED

The local recreation department has a busy week ahead with meetings slated for its playground leadership group on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Dr. B. M. McKoin will talk at 7 p.m. Monday at St. Francis sanitarium auditorium on "First Aid for Playground Workers." At 8 o'clock the group is to go to Temple B'Nai Israel annex where a meeting of community players is slated.

On Wednesday at 7 p.m. a meeting is slated in the auditorium of the St. Francis after which a meeting is to be held in the Camp Fire rooms.

On Saturday next at 5:30 o'clock Miss Armandine Renaud will talk on "Dancing and Its Place on the Playground." At 6 p.m. President C. C. Colvert, of the junior college, is to talk to the group.

What Today Means to You

"GEMINI"

If May 22nd is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m., from 3:30 p.m. to 4:50 p.m. and from 8:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. The danger periods are from noon to 1:35 p.m. and from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

An at home Sunday would be an astrologer's advice for May 22nd preparatory to an unusually strenuous week ahead. No adverse indications for the day, and a maximum of good will be derived from whatever source you seek pleasure, rest or comfort.

Children born on this May 22nd will have independent and forceful temperaments, combined with more than average vitality. Parents should strive to direct this vitality into constructive channels, for without some natural outlet, these children are apt to become restless and irritable. They will be quick, and ready-witted, a trifle brusque in manner, but will make excellent companions.

Born on May 22nd, you are generous and kind-hearted to a fault. You readily forgive in others what they would quickly condemn in you, yet, this unselfish and warm-hearted attitude wins for you many a dear and loyal friend. You are very much alive and vital to the joys of living, and even small every-day happenings enlist your interest and sympathy. You are sensitive and imaginative in your dealings with others—their troubles sadden you; in their joys, you find happiness. You are inclined to underrate your own ability and to overrate the ability of others. You often let chances go by, not feeling yourself quite up to the mark, whereas, in truth, you are more than capable and by your adaptability are equal to any situation.

You should cultivate more ambition and self-confidence, and give your talents a chance for growth. You are sitting in a back seat from choice and not from necessity. You need have less fear of the limelights than most people. There is something delightfully charming about your shyness, but, nevertheless, it is a detriment to you in the business side of life. All children make an appeal to you through your maternal or paternal instinct, as the case may be, and with a sympathetic mate, your home life should be ideal.

Successful People Born on May 22nd:

1—Tench Coxe, "Father of the American cotton industry."
2—Arthur Tappan, reformer.
4—Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, author.
6—Jacob G. Schurman, educator.

ALL MEN'S BIBLE CLASSES ARE TO HOLD JOINT MEET

All men's Bible classes from the churches of the Twin Cities are to meet in a union service on May 29 at the Paramount theater. This announcement was made Saturday morning following a conference held with representatives of the various organizations.

This action is taken to permit the members to hear Rev. Frank Tripp, former pastor of the First Baptist church, this city, and now pastor of the First Baptist church in St. Joseph, Mo., who will talk to the classes.

Reverend Tripp comes to Monroe to deliver the commencement address to the Ouachita parish high graduating class on the night of Friday, May 27.

Social Activities Revolve Around Miss Breard Whose Marriage Will Occur in June

The searchlight of social activity will be thrown on Miss Charlotte Breard during the remainder of her engagement days. On the tenth of June she will become the beautiful bride of Dr. Andros Scott Hamilton of Minneapolis and until that thrilling moment she will be the central figure at charming affairs planned by loving friends. Several lovely prenuptial events have already taken place with yesterday's luncheon with Mrs. Thomas Sholars hostess and bridge with Mrs. P. M. Atkins and Miss Ruth Atkins, hostesses, rounding out the week's pleasures. On the twenty-fifth Mrs. S. E. Huey and Mrs. G. P. Stubbs will entertain with a supper party. On the twenty-eighth Mrs. Carl McHenry and Mrs. David Garrett will entertain with a luncheon and Mrs. Nathan Gaston will entertain at bridge. On the second of June, Mrs. Benjamin Dawkins will have a luncheon party and on the third Mrs. Archie Melgren will entertain with a luncheon. Mr. and Mrs. Morton Myatt have planned a barbecue for the fourth of June. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Millsaps will entertain with a boating party on the fifth of June and Mrs. Travis Oliver at luncheon on the sixth. A dinner party that night will be given by Miss Louise Graves. Two affairs will take place on the seventh—a luncheon with Mrs. Clarence Oakley hostess and a dinner party given by Miss Marie Collens. Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Kilpatrick will entertain on the eighth with a barbecue and on the evening of the ninth Mrs. Alyce Florsheim will entertain the bridal party with a rehearsal supper.

Dr. Scott will arrive several days before the wedding to enjoy the last minute festivities. Miss Elizabeth Hayes, of San Francisco, and Miss Jennie Puryear, of Memphis, Tenn., will arrive several days before the ceremony also and will be counted among those present at the remaining prenuptial events.

Evans-Kiper Wedding Quietly Solemnized

The wedding of Miss Sue Evans, charming and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Evans of Sicily Island, was quietly celebrated on Sunday morning May 15, at 7 o'clock, with only immediate members of the two families and very close friends attending. The happy event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kiper in Gilbert, with the reception rooms aglow with baskets of sweet peas and roses.

Rev. R. L. Cook, pastor of the First Baptist church of Gilbert, performed the impressive double ring ceremony, with Mr. Leslie Kiper, brother of the groom, presenting the ring.

The bride was unusually lovely in a pink ensemble with white accessories. She is a graduate of the Louisiana State normal and has been a member of the local high school faculty for the past two years, where her gracious personality has made for her many friends.

Mr. Kiper is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kiper of Gilbert and is a successful young business man being associated with the Kiper Hardware and Lumber Co. of Winner.

Following the ceremony a reception was held and refreshments served to Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kiper, Mrs. S. A. Kiper, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Knight, Miss Margaret DeWitt, Mr. C. H. Gill, Mrs. Louise Reams, Dr. and Mrs. Gill, Messrs. Leslie, Dann and Ralph Kiper, Rev. Cook.

Mr. Kiper and his bride left by motor for New Orleans and the gulf coast for a few days, after which they will be at home to their friends temporarily in the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kiper in Gilbert.

Mrs. C. J. Smith, Park avenue, was the charming hostess to the Martha Washington Needle club Friday afternoon, in the lovely home of her daughter, Mrs. B. F. Hardie. Delicious schaum torte and embossed individual cakes were served to the members.

Mrs. Selig Will Present Music Pupils in Recital

Mrs. Dean Selig will present her violin and piano pupils in a program of charming music at the junior college auditorium Thursday afternoon, at four o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended the public to attend.

Dinner Party in Honor of Lovely Young Student

A group of beautiful girls, with Miss Clarissa Davis, the central figure, gathered around the charming dinner table in the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Davis on Auburn avenue, Friday night.

The dinner was given in honor of their daughter and brought together close friends all of whom are members of the senior class. The table overlaid with handsome Venetian lace was covered with a blanket of pink sweet peas with silver appointments completing the pink and silver symphony. Tall Princess tapers of pink burned in silver candlesticks and silver goblets and compotes completed the picture.

An exquisite corsage of pink sweet peas was placed at each cover, also graced by "sweet girl graduate" place cards.

Mrs. Davis was assisted by Mrs. S. W. Davis.

Miss Mary Sanders who is a student at Antioch college in Ohio has spent the past ten weeks near Philadelphia teaching in a state school for delinquent girls. Her experiences have been very interesting and varied and the position she has held she found as represented—a real job.

She resumes her program of studies at the college on May 23rd. Miss Sanders spent the past weekend visiting her aunt Mrs. Robbie F. Williams in New York City, and on two previous weekends she visited former Antioch friends in Philadelphia who are now attending other institutions, one being a Yale student, and the other Swarthmore.

Among oher trips of interest was an evening spent at Bryn Mawr college to attend a program of note.

In the Pictures

We have in the pictures today a group of outstanding girl graduates whose scholastic records have placed them in the front ranks. To them all homage is due.

Miss Dean McKoin, the charming young daughter of Dr. and Mrs. B. M. McKoin, was chosen valedictorian of the senior class of the Neville high school. Miss Dorothy Flanagan, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. T. Flanagan, was chosen valedictorian of the senior class of the Ouachita parish high schol. Miss Mildred Elliott, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Elliott, was chosen salutatorian of the senior class of the Ouachita parish high school. Miss Dorothy Apgar, beautiful young daughter of Mrs. William Thurman and the late Mr. Leon Apgar, was chosen the most popular member of the senior class of the Neville high school.

Beautiful Bridge Event at P. M. Atkins Home in Honor of Lovely Bride of Early June

Miss Charlottee Breard, a lovely figure in grey crepe model with smart grey turban and grey fox furs was the honor guest at charmingly planned bridge affair yesterday afternoon with Mrs. P. M. Atkins and daughter, Miss Ruth Atkins, hostesses at their home on Riverside drive.

The hostesses in crisp white frocks welcomed the guests in the spacious drawing rooms, redolent with the perfume of myriad orchid colored sweet peas overflowing from lavendar pottery urns and silver baskets. Orchid, the color chosen by Miss Breard for her bridal color theme, was developed in every detail of this gracious hospitality. The score cards were clever conceits reminiscent of June brides and the high score trophies were handsome decks of cards in orchid suede cases. Miss Breard's gifts from her hostesses was a set of handsome orchid colored linen sheets and pillow cases, beautifully boxed and ribbon tied.

A luscious salad course and orchid tinted ices was served at the orchid linen covered card tables to Miss Breard and Misses Alyce Florsheim, Marie Collens, Happy Hudson, Alma Summer Potts, Connie McReynolds, Violet Meyer, Virginia Mitchell, Florence Ferguson, Elizabeth Breard, Elizabeth O'Donnell, Louise Graves, Elizabeth Oglesby, Gertrude Hart, Beverly Fauntleroy, Alice Cobb, Mrs. Wesley Shafto, Mrs. John Wooten, Mrs. Fletcher Ashcraft, Mrs. Floyd Martin, Mrs. Neil Buie, Mrs. Prentiss, Clark, Mrs. Cecil Jarrell, Mrs. Archie Melgren.

Pink radiance roses and blue corn flowers nodded their heads from a gorgeous floral plaque centering the beautifully appointed luncheon table in the private dining room of the Lotus club yesterday when Mrs. Thomas Sholars entertained in honor of Miss Charlotte Breard and Miss Elizabeth O'Donnell, lovely brides of June.

Interesting pink tissue wrapped packages at the covers marked for the guests of honor proved to be handsome trousseau gifts of imported linen luncheon sets.

A five-course luncheon accentuating the bridal theme was served to Miss Breard and Miss O'Donnell and Miss Marie Collens. Miss Alma Summer Potts, Miss Alyce Florsheim, Miss Happy Hudson, Miss Louise Graves, Mrs. Henrietta Keplinger, Mrs. Morton Myatt and the hostess.

Mr. and Mrs. John Marcellin Breard request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter Charlotte Olive to Doctor Andros Scott Hamilton on Friday, June the tenth one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two at seven-thirty o'clock in the evening
First Methodist Church
Monroe, Louisiana

Reception at home immediately after the ceremony.

A group of motorists attending the meeting of the Northern Arch Deaconry in Tallulah yesterday were Mrs. Alfred Heanen, Mrs. Fagan Cox, Mrs. John Sanders, Mrs. H. E. Quinn, Mrs. E. McDaniels, and Miss Lillie Wetzel. Mrs. C. B. K. Weed, Louisiana state president of the auxiliary, accompanied the party home and will be the weekend house guest of Mrs. Cox.

Patrons of the Arts Throng Gallery at Frances Hotel to View Beautiful Paintings

The Sketch club art exhibition and reception at the Frances hotel Friday night has evoked far-flung interest and a city-wide approval as manifested in the throngs of visitors who walked through the gallery inspecting the pictures, expertly hung to show to the best possible advantage the lights and colors of the paintings.

So vital was the influence of this exhibit on the public generally, that the narrow confines of the field of art in Monroe will extend into wider, greener fields. The name of Mr. Amos Armstrong, director and guiding spirit of this little band of intelligent and enthusiastic art lovers will be graven on Monroe's tablet of fame devoted to those who have blazed a trail and accomplished something of value to the artistic life of the city. Members of the Sketch club have forged dramatically to the front in the past few months. The number of paintings displayed in the exhibition was sufficient proof of the herculean efforts to make possible an art exhibit at this time.

The judges found it rather difficult to discriminate in the matter of selecting the outstanding painting. However, the work of Mrs. H. J. James stood out sufficiently to claim the blue ribbon. Her painting of "Moss Hung Oak" was a lovely thing of pleasant warmth and atmosphere, beautiful tone quality and clarity of color. One is conscious of the future possibilities of the artist when studying this painting. This was one of the features which won the blue ribbon for Mrs. James.

Realizing the heavy demands placed upon the artist in portrait painting and the need for years of study, Mrs. H. J. Fernandez war awarded the popularity prize for her painting of Mrs Frances Folmar. The picture, life size, boasts of striking color effects. Mrs. Fernandez has been pursuing the study of art for several years, and is one of Mr. Armstrong's advanced pupils.

Mr. Armstrong's pictures were hung in the main studio and were much admired during the course of the evening. A conservative painter in every sense of the word, Mr. Armstrong's work will endure with the passing years. His paintings soothe and inspire the beholder—their beauty of coloring grows on one rather than calling immediate attention by means of flamboyant tints. Several art connoisseurs present at the art exhibit admired his landscapes, bright with sunshine and rich with the green of trees and turf. It is not the subject alone but the way it is painted that brings appreciation of the essential feeling in his work.

Mrs. F. C. Holden—Formation of Bernstein Park.

Mrs. Henry Clay Mayo—Self Portrait, Zeigin's Beach, April, The Old Hut, Reflection.

Mrs. John Sisson—Industrial School, Lazarre Point, View from Lazarre Point, Bayou DeSiard.

Mrs. H. J. Fernandez—Peach Blossom, Solitude, Parasite, portrait of Mrs. Frances Folmar, Hotel Frances from Lazarre Point.

Mrs. H. M. James—Moss Hung Oak, Gray Day, Twin Pines, Spring Blossom, Indian Summer.

Miss Evelyn Hill, Blue Rhythm, Hazy Swamp.

Miss Bernie Cason—Peach Blossom, Trees.

Mr. Joe Craig—Spring, Southern Pines, Tender Greens.

Miss Louise Moore—Lazarre Pine, Cypress Swamp.

Mrs. Tom Monk — Peach Blossom, The Pines at Lazarre Point, Bernstein Brook, Lake DeSiard, The Oaks.

Social Activities Revolve Around Miss Breard Whose Marriage Will Occur in June

The searchlight of social activity will be thrown on Miss Charlotte Breard during the remainder of her engagement days. On the tenth of June she will become the beautiful bride of Dr. Andros Scott Hamilton of Minneapolis and until that thrilling moment she will be the central figure at charming affairs planned by loving friends. Several lovely prenuptial events have already taken place with yesterday's luncheon with Mrs. Thomas Sholars hostess and bridge with Mrs. P. M. Atkins and Miss Ruth Atkins, hostesses, rounding out the week's pleasures. On the twenty-fifth Mrs. S. E. Huey and Mrs. G. P. Stubbs will entertain with a supper party. On the twenty-eighth Mrs. Carl McHenry and Mrs. David Garrett will entertain with a luncheon and Mrs. Nathan Gaston will entertain at bridge. On the second of June, Mrs. Benjamin Dawkins will have a luncheon party and on the third Mrs. Alchie Melgren will entertain with a luncheon. Mr. and Mrs. Morton Myatt have planned a barbecue for the fourth of June. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Millsaps will entertain with a boating party on the fifth of June and Mrs. Travis Oliver at luncheon on the sixth. A dinner party that night will be given by Miss Louise Graves. Two affairs will take place on the seventh—a luncheon with Mrs. Clarence Oakley hostess and a dinner party given by Miss Marie Collens. Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Kilpatrick will entertain on the eighth with a barbecue and on the evening of the ninth Mrs. Alyce Florsheim will entertain the bridal party with a rehearsal supper.

Dr. Scott will arrive several days before the wedding to enjoy the last minute festivities. Miss Elizabeth Hayes, of San Francisco, and Miss Jennie Puryear, of Memphis, Tenn., will arrive several days before the ceremony also and will be counted among those present at the remaining prenuptial events.

Evans-Kiper Wedding Quietly Solemnized

The wedding of Miss Sue Evans, charming and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Evans of Sicily Island, was quietly celebrated on Sunday morning May 15, at 7 o'clock, with only immediate members of the two families and very close friends attending. The happy event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kiper in Gilbert, with the reception rooms aglow with baskets of sweet peas and roses.

Rev. R. L. Cook, pastor of the First Baptist church of Gilbert, performed the impressive double ring ceremony, with Mr. Leslie Kiper, brother of the groom, presenting the ring.

The bride was unusually lovely in a pink ensemble with white accessories. She is a graduate of the Louisiana State normal and has been a member of the local high school faculty for the past two years, where her gracious personality has made for her many friends.

Mr. Kiper is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kiper of Gilbert and is a successful young business man, being associated with the Kiper Hardware and Lumber Co., of Wisner.

Following the ceremony a reception was held and refreshments served to Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kiper, Mrs. S. A. Kiper, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Knight, Miss Margaret DeWitt, Mr. C. H. Gill, Mrs. Louise Reams, Dr. and Mrs. Gill, Messrs. Leslie, Dann and Ralph Kiper, Rev. Cook.

Mr. Kiper and his bride left by motor for New Orleans and the gulf coast for a few days, after which they will be at home to their friends temporarily in the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Kiper in Gilbert.

Mrs. C. J. Smith, Park avenue, was the charming hostess to the Martha Washington Needle club Friday afternoon, in the lovely home of her daughter, Mrs. B. P. Hardie. Delicious schaum torte and embossed individual cakes were served to the members.

Little Theater Notes of Interest

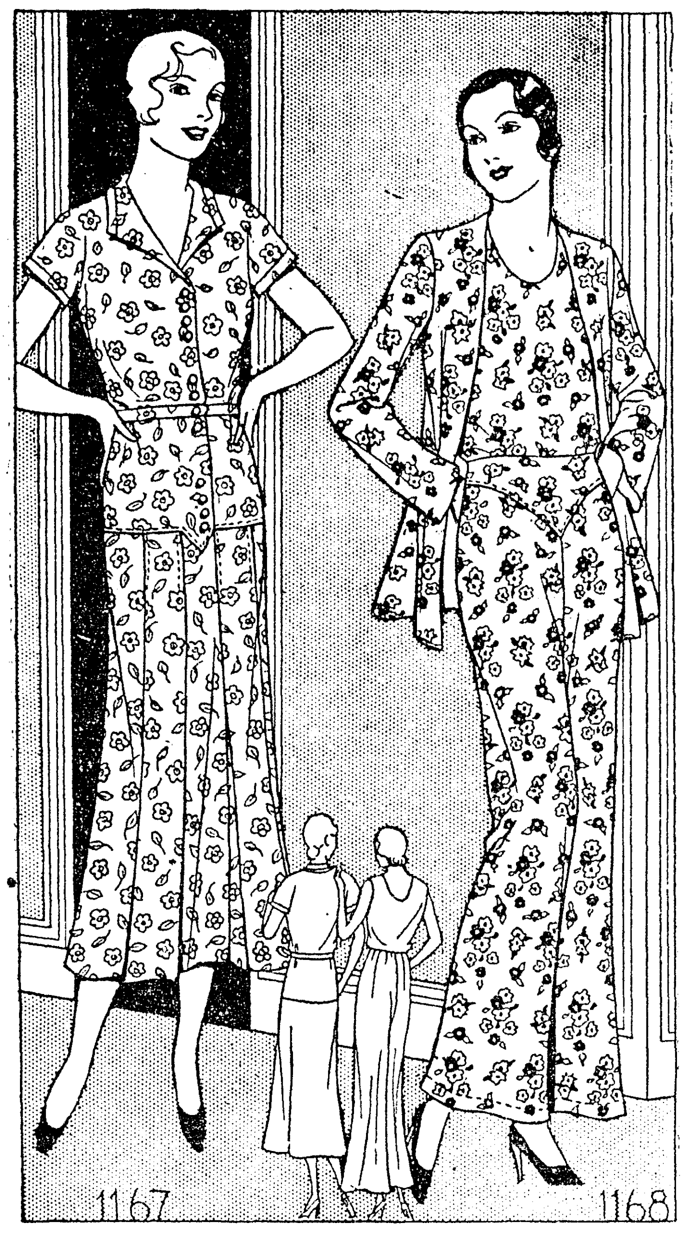
(Contributed)

The plot thickens—haven't you a suppressed desire to write plays? Of course you have—so join the Little Theater and enter the contest—develop your hidden talent.

K. Ann is working like a trojan, and inspiring others to do likewise; if this keeps up we will surpass Shreveport—and, why not. Sara Shafto is directing again, on short notice—but we can depend on a credible performance. And do you know that Miss Eve Bradford is chairman of the publicity committee. Yes sir, we have the newspapers on our side. Albert Horuff says he won't take part in the stage work, but I think he will—everyone knows a play is not a success without the comedy relief. All joking aside, Mr. Horuff is one of the most faithful supporters of the Little Theater movement in Monroe, and it gives one a comfortable feeling to have "big business" take an active interest in civic enterprises.

Those of you who took the course in dramatic art, presented by Mr. Charles Wells, will have ample opportunity to practice all you learned, not only the dramatic, but in the complete workshop to be maintained. Think of the fun you can have making masks, scenery, miniature stages, puppets, and all the other interesting and instructive things connected with a theatrical workshop. So please, everyone, come to the meeting Monday night, in the Temple annex, at 8 o'clock—join the Little Theater, and help us put it over with a bang.

World and News-Star Pattern



Have you noticed that everything in feminine apparel so far this season has that keen, clean, crisp appearance? Particularly among the daytime and sports garments, there is a feeling of youth, impudence and tubbability. Perhaps it is the gay prints, infectious with their riot of colors, or the beauty of fabrics, both silk and cotton, that set us in a turmoil trying to decide which is smartest and which in keeping with our budgets. Here are two models for which you will have no end of use, whether you are a stay-at-home, or fortunate enough to travel.

Pattern 1167

A typical frock for sports, and most attractive in broadcloth, pique, shantung, cambric seersucker, lawn or linen. A lovely print, white, or one of the pastels may be chosen with equal assurance of chic. Sizes 14 to 20 and 32 to 42. Size 16 requires 3 1-2 yards of 36-inch fabric.

Pattern 1168

For lounging, for play and for sleeping, this is a stunning ensemble consisting of blouse, trousers and jacket. And, by the way, the jacket pattern may be used for your sheer fabrics and worn with evening and afternoon frocks. Sizes 14 to 20 and 32 to 40. Size 16 requires 5 yards of 36-inch fabric.

These models are very easy to make as each pattern comes to you with simple and exact instructions. Yardage is given for every size.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for EACH pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, THE STYLE NUMBER and SIZE of each pattern ordered.

An additional variety of delightful styles for adults and kiddies is offered in our CURRENT FASHION CATALOG. Chic authentically styled models for every summer need will be found in charming abundance in the 32 pages of this beautiful book. SEND FOR YOUR COPY. This catalog is FIFTEEN CENTS when ordered alone. Catalog and pattern together, TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Address all mail and orders to Monroe Morning World Pattern Department, 243 West 17th Street, New York City.

The Swan Song was sung by members of the Monroe Pan-Hellenic society as they gathered around the luncheon table in the Rainbow tea room yesterday for their last meeting of the year.

Seated at the flower-adorned table every one present realized that much water will flow under the bridge before they will again assemble for their next year's work. Vacation days will take the majority of them to the four corners of the glabe not returning to Monroe until late September.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Miss Marie Collens; first vice president, Mrs. R. L. Davis; second vice president, Mrs. Wesley Shafto; secretary, Mrs. Flood Madison; treasurer, Miss Dorothy Mengis; reporter, Miss Constance McReynolds.

A distinct feature of the luncheon hour was Miss Clara Hall's inspirational talk on the ideals, motives and aspirations of the Monroe Pan-Hellenic. Mrs. Claud Harrison outlined next year's projects, which will include the presentation of Tony Sarg's.

Members present were: Misses Elizabeth Breard, Sara Bres, Elizabeth Cason, Florence Ferguson, Clara Hall, Beryl Madison, Dorothy Mengis, Aimee deGraffenreid, Mrs. John Morrison, Mrs. Claud Harrison, Mrs. O. W. Brown, Mrs. W. W. Cooper, Mrs. R. L. Davis, Mrs. H. J. Madison, Mrs. Thomas Munholland, Mrs. C. W. Perkins, Jr., Mrs. Gordon Wright, Mrs. Gordon Surguine, Mrs. Wesley Shafto.

Dr. Minnie I. Faulk left on Wednesday for Lexington and Louisville, Kentucky where she will combine business and pleasure during a visit of two weeks.

Two beautiful oil paintings, much admired during the art exhibition and reception at the Frances hotel Friday night, will be contributed by the owners, Mrs. H. M. James and Mrs. Henry Mayo, as prizes for high contract and auction bridge scores, at the benefit bridge affair sponsored by the Fine Arts club at the home of Miss Eve Bradford, 417 St. John street tomorrow night. A carved vase, the handiwork of Mr. H. M. James, will also be numbered among the prizes. The public is extended a most cordial invitation to be guests of the Fine Arts club on this occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Claude Moore announce the arrival of a son, Arnold Lee, at Dr. Hill's clinic on the nineteenth of May.

CREDITS SALE'S SUCCESS TO NEWSPAPER ADS' PULL

Declaring that large crowds were daily taking advantage of Frankel Brothers' "forced to quit" sales, A. L. Snider, who is in charge of the sale, last night accredited the success of the sale to the firm's low prices and advertising in The World and News-Star.

Mr. Snider, who is connected with the Snider Sales system of Shreveport, said he was highly pleased with the results of the sale, which opened Thursday morning.

"Ever since we opened our doors Thursday morning we have had an exceptional response to our prices, which we have made extremely low because of the fact that Frankel Brothers are really going out of business and we must get rid of the stock."

COLORED KINDERGARTEN WORKERS TO MEET TODAY

The kindergarten workers (colored) are today to hold their last child welfare meeting of the season at the colored First Baptist church at 2:45 o'clock. A number of speakers of both races are to attend. Among the number are Mrs. A. G. Pace and Mrs. F. B. Neeley who are to talk on temperance.

Immediately after the meeting there is to be a session held for committee members named in connection with project looking toward the establishment of a home for aged negroes.

MULHEARN'S FUNERAL HOME INCORPORATED
The Home of Dignified, Sympathetic Service
A Funeral Home as an institution should embrace a number of coordinating factors in order to function smoothly and efficiently.
We feel justified in pointing with pride to what we have to offer:
In personnel we combine in harmonious cooperation the poise and wisdom born only of age and experience with the splendid enthusiasm and vitality of youth. Our operatives are trained and licensed by the state of Louisiana and our lady attendant is a graduate nurse.
Our equipment is the latest and best that money can buy and our stock of supplies full, complete, and of a range to suit the financial standing of our clients.
Our Home is entirely free from the coldly commercial atmosphere of the ordinary "Funeral Chapel" or "Mortuary Department," and is permeated by the sense of sacred peace.
Our Ambulance Service is operated to provide safety and comfort in the shortest time possible.

Choral Club Will Render Holy City

All roads will lead to the junior college auditorium Tuesday night for the glorious outpouring of music—The Holy City, sacred cantata featuring members of the Choral club, under the direction of Roger C. Frisbie.

The Holy City will be the first public offering by this group of artists who are accomplishing some splendid work under the direction of Mr. Frisbie.

Among the soloists in Tuesday night's cantata will be heard: Mrs. Louis Hullum, Mrs. Ruth Rasbury, Mrs. Clyde Sanders and Mrs. Henry Whitfield, sopranos; Mr. E. O. Hinton, Mr. Henry Rickey, Mr. L. A. Stulce and Mrs. Joseph Wright, tenors; Miss Irene Clark, Mrs. Robert George and Mrs. Ben Stern, altos; Mr. D. P. Gerald, Mr. Harry Prophit and Mr. Lloyd Walters, bass. Miss Florence Zeigler will act as accompanist.

The Holy City, rich in harmony, pathos, unusual brilliancy, will provide a wonderful vehicle for the beautiful chorus work. The cantata will be presented in two parts as follows:

PART I.

Introduction—Instrumental.

Chorus and tenor solo—"No Shadows Yonder."

Air—Tenor, "My Soul Is Athirst for God."

Trio for ladies' voices—"It Shall Come to Pass."

Air — Contralto, "Eye Hath Not Seen."

Chorus—"For Thee, O Dear, Dear Country."

Chorus—"Thine Is the Kingdom."

Air—Bass, "Thus Saith the Lord."

Chorus—"Holy, Holy, Holy."

Chorus—"Let the Heavens Rejoice."

Air—Tenor, "To the Lord Our God."

Quartet—"The Fining Pot Is for Silver."

Air—Soprano, "These Are They."

Chorus—"List the Cherubic Host."

Chorus—"Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works."

The Chorul club is comprised of the following members: Sopranos, Mrs. T. O. Brown, Mrs. C. C. Carroll, Mrs. L. S. Forte, Mrs. R. C. Frisbie, Mrs. D. P. Gerald, Mrs. C. D. Henderson, Mrs. Louis Hullum, Miss Maida McClendon, Mrs. E. H. Murrell, Mrs. Paul Newman, Mrs. M. B. Pearce, Mrs. Clarence Powell, Mrs. Ruth Rasbury, Miss Sarah Robinett, Mrs. Clyde Sanders, Mrs. T. A. Sauls, Mrs. John Sholars, Miss Beatrice Skirvin, Miss Alice Louise Smith, Mrs. Ben Stern, Mrs. L. A. Stulce, Mrs. Fred Thatcher, Miss Addie Ulmer, Mrs. W. D. Walmsley, Mrs. Henry Whitfield, Miss Katherine Wolfe, Miss Mary J. Zeigler.

Altos: Mrs. Chas. Bennett, Miss Irene Clark, Mrs. W. J. Cornett, Mrs. Robert George, Mrs. Jack Hayes, Mrs. F. C. Holden, Mrs. Frances Leavell, Mrs. George Moffett, Mrs. W. C. Norris, Miss Beatrice Rhymes, Mrs. J. P. Royce.

Tenors: M. I. Gilliland, E. O. Hinton, Henry Ricker, F. H. Riggs, L. B. Stall, L. A. Stulce, Fred Thatcher, Joe Wright.

Basses: D. P. Gerald, Leon Hammond, L. T. Hastings, Joe Meek, B. Owen, Harry Prophit, H. A. Thigpen, W. D. Wamsley, Lloyd Walters, H. H. Whiting, George Sexton.

Little Theater Notes of Interest

(Contributed)

The plot thickens—haven't you a suppressed desire to write plays? Of course you have—so join the Little Theater and enter the contest—develop your hidden talent.

K. Ann is working like a trojan, and inspiring others to do likewise; if this keeps up we will surpass Shreveport—and, why not. Sara Shafto is directing again, on short notice—but we can depend on a credible performance. And do you know that Miss Eve Bradford is chairman of the publicity committee. Yes sir, we have the newspapers on our side. Albert Horuff says he won't take part in the stage work, but I think he will—everyone knows a play is not a success without the comedy relief. All joking aside, Mr. Horuff is one of the most faithful supporters of the Little Theater movement in Monroe, and it gives one a comfortable feeling to have "big business" take an active interest in civic enterprises.

Those of you who took the course in dramatic art, presented by Mr. Charles Wells, will have ample opportunity to practice all you learned, not only the dramatic, but in the complete workshop to be maintained. Think of the fun you can have making masks, scenery, miniature stages, puppets, and all the other interesting and instructive things connected with a theatrical workshop. So please, everyone, come to the meeting Monday night, in the Temple annex, at 8 o'clock—join the Little Theater, and help us put it over with a bang.

The Home of Dignified, Sympathetic Service

A Funeral Home as an institution should embrace a number of coordinating factors in order to function smoothly and efficiently.

We feel justified in pointing with pride to what we have to offer:

In personnel we combine in harmonious cooperation the poise and wisdom born only of age and experience with the splendid enthusiasm and vitality of youth. Our operatives are trained and licensed by the state of Louisiana and our lady attendant is a graduate nurse.

Our equipment is the latest and best that money can buy and our stock of supplies full, complete, and of a range to suit the financial standing of our clients.

Our Home is entirely free from the coldly commercial atmosphere of the ordinary "Funeral Chapel" or "Mortuary Department," and is permeated by the sense of sacred peace.

Our Ambulance Service is operated to provide safety and comfort in the shortest time possible.

NEW YORK MAKES 26 HITS OFF SIX SENATOR HURLERS

Pennock Allows But Six Hits in Opener and Allen Holds Nats to Five

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—The Yankees treated approximately 60,000 fans to an exhibition of an unbeatable baseball combination, excellent pitching and heavy hitting, today as they defeated the Washington Senators in a double-header. The scores were 14 to 2 and 8 to 0.

Babe Ruth and Tony Lazzeri were the leaders in the assault on six Washington hurlers. The Babe hit two homers in the opener, bringing his total for the season to ten, and Tony gathered six hits in seven times at bat, including a homer, two doubles and a triple.

Ruth's first homer came in the fifth inning with the bases full and helped the Yanks put the game away with a seven run rally. It was the fifteenth time in his career he had hit for the circuit with loaded sacks. The other was in the next inning with one on. Lou Gehrig also hit his sixth homer of the year in the first game.

Allen won his own game in the second inning when he hit for the circuit after Chapman had walked and Dicked had singled.

MACKS TAKE PAIR

PHILADELPHIA, May 21 (AP)—The Athletics ran their winning streak to six straight and swept the four-game series with the Boston Red Sox by taking both ends of today's double-header. The Mackmen won the first game 18 to 6 and the second 6 to 3.

Boston used six pitchers in the first game, starting with four in the first inning. Five of them issued 15 bases on balls and gave up 17 hits, including home runs by Foxx and Williams, both of whom also hit for the circuit in the second game. Foxx's homers brought his total for the season to 15.

Sugar Cain held Boston to six hits and outpitched Johnny Macfayden in

The coaches' medal, awarded to the most outstanding athlete of the year, was presented to C. J. Gilbert, stellar track, baseball and football man.

Don Brown, Ruston, was elected captain of the track team with Berry Yeldell, Monroe, alternate-captain. Brown won the district high hurdle championship in record time at Louisiana College several weeks ago and during the entire season won every individual match with high hurdlers. Yeldell annexed two championships at the district meet, breaking two records and winning the most points for Tech. Both men will be seniors next year.

Ben Johnson, Longview, Texas, received the nomination for basketball captain with Nick Medica, Jena, alternate. Johnson has worlds of speed on the court and plays at a forward post. Medica, smallest athlete in history here, excells at forward.

James Riser, Ruston, won out over Atley Donald, Downsville, for baseball captain when a tie vote resulted in the nomination on the toss of a coin. Riser is a second baseman while Donald fills the role as pitcher and outfielder. Both players will be on the squad for their third year next spring.

Jim Cole, Ruston, was elected to lead the golfers during the next intercollegiate season. Cole ranked No. 1 man of the quartet this year and is outstanding among divot diggers of Ruston and Tech.

Johnny Moffett, Homer, was elected president of the "T" club with Medica as nominee for secretary. Moffett plays in the backfield on the grid organization and is a sprinter of the track team.

Talks were made at the meeting by Coaches Bohler and Shirley, J. P. Cole, chairman of the Tech athletic committee, and Francis Mangham, Coushatta, retiring president of the club.

Announcement was made that all captains of any of the intercollegiate sport teams would be elected at a meeting of the club at the end of the year. It was also announced by Coach Bohler that the track team members this year would be recommended for extra award in the form of gold track shoes for going through the regular season without a loss and winning the third district S. I. A. A. title.

BROWN MILL TO PLAY CLARKS LUMBERJACKS

The Brown Paper Mill team, which yesterday defeated Louisiana Tech, will meet the strong Clarks Lumberjacks at the Brown park this afternoon. The game will start at 3:30 o'clock.

Manager Carey Phillips, who usually plays an infield position, announced last night that he probably would take the mound against the Lumberjacks.

The Safety Firsts defeated Clarks in a game earlier this season but the Lumberjacks have been strengthened by several new players recently and a close game is expected today.

A small admission charge will be made for the game today, Phillips said.

FERRIDAY HIGH TEAMS MAKE GOOD RECORDS

FERRIDAY, May 21 (Special)—With the closing of the local high school Friday, May 27, the Ferriday school has completed its best year in athletics in the history of the institution. Coach Hugh Bateman's football team were winners in every one of their games with the exception of the title contest with the Rayville Hornets.

The local basketball and track teams were winners of several tournaments and the track team captured the Class B championship at the Central Louisiana rally in Pineville. The girls, too, under the direction of Coach F. F. Thompson placed winning teams on the field and with most of the performers returning next year, the school expects to enjoy another successful season.

Tenseness in the left side will prevent it from turning in the backswing. As the downswing is started the right side will then tighten and hinder the hipshift and free turn.

Let the left side relax as the club is taken to the top of the backswing, so that the left arm can do its share. In the downswing, replace the left foot early and let the left leg be ready to support the weight.

Concentrate on swinging the club with the arms. This will prevent a hurried swing.

THE NEW SKIPPER.

In the first place, Hopper is known as a hustler. He has a reputation of battling for every ball game and he is able to instill that scrappy spirit into his players. The Twins were hustling under Frank Kitchens and Hopper will have little difficulty in keeping up the old fighting spirit.

When the Southeastern league blew up, Hopper was leading the loop in individual hitting. He was clouting the well known apple to the tune of .417, which is quite some hitting, even in the Southeastern. He can prune off a few points from that figure and still be a mighty slugger in the Cotton States. Of course, no one expects him to maintain such a pace all season long but there is every indication that the new Monroe skipper will be up among the leaders when the final figures roll in.

In 1927 Clay Hopper furnished the hitting feature of the Three-Eye league. He was a member of the Danville club and one day he hit four home runs in one game, driving in ten runs.

Last year Hopper was manager of the Scottdale club of the Middle Atlantic league. You will remember that the Middle Atlantic tried the experiment of having 12 clubs in the circuit, so Hopper had plenty of competition. Notwithstanding the fact that there were almost 300 ball players performing in that league during the season, Hopper was the fifth hitter at the end of the season. His season's average was just .354. He participated in 126 games, hit 24 home runs, 26 doubles and 18 triples. He led the league in total bases with 293 and incidentally, Scottdale finished the season on top in team batting with a mark of .303, the only club in the circuit to hit over .300 for the season. His fielding mark for the season was .933. In 125 games in the outfield, he made 12 errors.

As manager of the Greensboro club of the Piedmont league in 1930, Hopper participated in 140 games and batted .355. He hit 23 home runs, 37 doubles and 15 triples, for 321 total bases.

From a personal standpoint, Hopper bears the reputation of being an extremely likeable person. He is 30 years old, is married and makes his winter home at Greenwood, Miss. He is five feet, eleven inches tall, weighs 175 pounds and has dark brown hair and brown eyes, if that means anything to you. He is a graduate of Mississippi A. and M. college and starred in football and basketball.

Taking everything into consideration, there isn't any reason why Hopper shouldn't make an instant hit here. Monroe won't be entirely new to him, for he was a member of the Laurel team back in 1929.

Clay will pay his first visit to Monroe since becoming manager of the team, next Monday, when the team has an off day. He will make his debut on the local diamond on May 28, when the Twins open a series with the Baton Rouge Standards.

BASEBALL HELPS

Detroit was having its internal troubles, as far as its officialdom was concerned, but now that the Tigers are right up there in the American league chase, all that's been ironed out.

At least, that's what Mayor Murphy of Detroit says. It seems the whole town is talking baseball and whenever councilmen gather to discuss important civic matters, the baseball talk tends to relieve the pressure. When two men sit side by side in the grandstand and pull for a baseball team, it's hard to face each other across the conference table and stage a political ruckus. Here's the result, as reported by William Braucher, sports editor of NEA Service:

"The other day Mayor Murphy sat at his desk, with a delegation waiting to confer with him at the long conference table in his office. The subject of the ball team was introduced.

"It's just the thing for Detroit right now," said His Honor. "Detroit has got a case of nerves. If we had not been careful we would have pulled some awful boners, like taking recreation facilities from children, closing the libraries and interfering with police, fire and health services.

"One of the things that brings us back to a wholesome balance is a winning ball team. It's 'Casey at the bat again.' Detroit always was a great baseball town.

"Now the Tigers are gripping the imagination again. They have a going team. It is fresh. There is Davis at first base and Rhiel at third, for example, to stimulate interest. They are beginning to bring the same color to the game that Ty Cobb brought in the old days.

"And if we had a glass of beer to go with it, because baseball and beer went together, that would get everybody off their nerves."

"And Councilman Smith: "Now they're predicting a pennant for Detroit. I haven't heard so much baseball discussion in 10 years—everywhere I go. It's like a drink of cool water after a long march."

"Then spake Councilman Lodge: 'The fact that they are up there fighting for the top is one of the most helpful things in the economic condition we now find ourselves in. The psychological effect of a winning team is wonderful.' "

BLACK BARONS BEAT MONARCHS IN OPENER

The Birmingham Black Barons stopped the Monroe Monarchs' winning streak yesterday at Casino park when they defeated the Monarchs by a score of 5-1. The Monarchs had won nine straight games before the Black Barons put the skids to them.

The game was a pitchers' duel until the sixth when a hit, an error and a misjudged ball in the sun-field caused the first two scores of the game. The Barons scored three more in the eighth. The Monarchs made their lone marker in the last frame when Saunders doubled and Parnell singled.

The Monarchs will take another crack at the Barons in a double header today, the first game starting at 2:30 o'clock. Manager Johnson stated that he will send Big Morris to the mound for the first game and use all the pitchers if necessary to stop the Barons. The gates will open at 1 o'clock to accommodate the fans.

TALLULAH GOLFERS PLAY HERE TODAY

Madison Parish Players Meet Municipal Club in Inter-City Match

Members of the Municipal Golf club play their first inter-city match of the season on their home course today when they meet golfers of the Tallulah Country club. Play will start promptly at 1 o'clock this afternoon.

Tallulah defeated the local golfers in an inter-city match last season, and Muny members are anxious to even the score. The local club has played one inter-city match this year, losing to Natchez golfers at Natchez last month.

Professional Lund Harper said last night that the matches would start promptly at the appointed hour, and he urged players to report on time. A large delegation of Tallulah golfers is expected to compete in the match.

The pro-amateur match will be played between Ward Edwards, Tallulah pro, and his partner, Kenneth Brown, and Harper and Luckey Royster. This match will start at 1:15 o'clock.

The local course is in excellent condition and some low scores are expected to be posted today, Harper said.

Following are the local team pairings:

Prioleau Ellis, Jr., and Jimmie Harper, Harry Taylor and H. M. Manning, Fred Majors and Q. Henry, R. B. Wofford and Lloyd McDoniel, George Guerriero and Captain Harry Roberts, Jordan Barton and F. E. Maxwell, Victor Davis and Guy Campbell, Bishop Pipes and Rod Guy, Johnny Kramer and Ernest Eves, Ray Buce and W. C. Johnson, and Lund Harper and Lucky Royster.

RED STICKS GET TO FLORRID FOR 3 RUNS IN FIRST

Hopper Won't Report Here Until Monday; Bilgere and Rea Join Team

Clay Hopper, recently appointed manager of the Monroe club, is ill at his home in Mobile and will be unable to join the local team until tomorrow, President D. Aubrey Haas was advised yesterday. Meanwhile, the Twins are in Baton Rouge under the leadership of Homer Ezzell.

Charley Barrett, Cardinal scout, joined the team at Baton Rouge yesterday. Catcher Rea, from Mobile, and Infielder Bilgere, a rookie from the Spring Hill college campus, also reported to the Twins yesterday. Barrett advised The World by telephone last night that several other players will be sent here.

BATON ROUGE, May 21 (Special)—The Standards jumped on Dick Florrid, veteran righthander, for three runs in the first inning today and the Twins couldn't overcome the early lead. Consequently, Baton Rouge won the first game of the series, 5 to 3.

Paul limited the Twins to seven hits, three of which were made by Homer Ezzell, who is in charge of the Monroe team until Manager Hopper arrives. Moses, fleet Monroe outfielder, made two hits with Fogelman and Florrid getting one each.

The Twins scored in the first inning when Moses singled, went to second on Fogelman's infield out and came home when Ezzell shot a sharp single into center field.

The Standards came right back and hopped on Florrid for three runs before he could settle down. After the hectic first frame, the little Monroe hurler pitched steady ball, giving up only eight hits during the entire game.

The Standards scored once in the second inning and made their fifth run in the fourth. Monroe scored in the fifth when West walked, went to second on Florrid's short single and came home on Moses' timely single to right.

The last run was scored in the eighth, Ezzell crossing the plate with the tally. He led off with a single, advanced to second and third on infield outs and scored on Hassler's bott at short.

Florrid struck out six Standards and issued only one base on balls. Paul fanned five and walked two.

The teams conclude the series Sunday. The first game was rained out Friday but the team managers tonight had not agreed on a double-header.

NEW YORK MAKES 26 HITS OFF SIX SENATOR HURLERS

Pennock Allows But Six Hits in Opener and Allen Holds Nats to Five

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—The Yankees treated approximately 60,000 fans to an exhibition of an unbeatable baseball combination, excellent pitching and heavy hitting, today as they defeated the Washington Senators in a double-header. The scores were 14 to 2 and 8 to 0.

Babe Ruth and Tony Lazzeri were the leaders in the assault on six Washington hurlers. The Babe hit two homers in the opener, bringing his total for the season to ten, and Tony gathered six hits in seven times at bat, including a homer, two doubles and a triple.

Ruth's first homer came in the fifth inning with the bases full and helped the Yanks put the game away with a seven run rally. It was the fifteenth time in his career he had hit for the circuit with loaded sacks. The other was in the next inning with one on. Lou Gehrig also hit his sixth homer of the year in the first game.

Allen won his own game in the second inning when he hit for the circuit after Chapman had walked and Dickey had singled.

MACKS TAKE PAIR

PHILADELPHIA, May 21 (AP)—The Athletics ran their winning streak to six straight and swept the four-game series with the Boston Red Sox by taking both ends of today's double-header. The Mackmen won the first game 18 to 6 and the second 6 to 3.

Boston used six pitchers in the first game, starting with four in the first inning. Five of them issued 15 bases on balls and gave up 17 hits, including home runs by Foxx and Williams, both of whom also hit for the circuit in the second game. Foxx's homers brought his total for the season to 13.

Sugar Cain held Boston to six hits and outpitched Danny Macfayden in

The coaches' medal, awarded to the most outstanding athlete of the year, was presented to C. J. Gilbert, stellar track, baseball and football man.

Don Brown, Ruston, was elected captain of the track team with Berry Yeldell, Monroe, alternate-captain. Brown won the district high hurdle championship in record time at Louisiana College several weeks ago and during the entire season won every individual match with high hurdlers. Yeldell annexed two championships at the district meet, breaking two records and winning the most points for Tech. Both men will be seniors next year.

Ben Johnson, Longview, Texas, received the nomination for basketball captain with Nick Medica, Jena, alternate. Johnson has worlds of speed on the court and plays at a forward post. Medica, smallest athlete in history here, excells at forward.

James Riser, Ruston, won out over Atley Donald, Downsville, for baseball captain when a tie vote resulted in the nomination on the toss of a coin. Riser is a second baseman while Donald fills the role as pitcher and outfielder. Both players will be on the squad for their third year next spring.

Jim Cole, Ruston, was elected to lead the golfers during the next intercollegiate season. Cole ranked No. 1 man of the quartet this year and is outstanding among divot diggers of Ruston and Tech.

Johnny Moffett, Homer, was elected president of the "T" club with Medica as nominee for secretary. Moffett plays in the backfield on the grid organization and is a sprinter of the track team.

Talks were made at the meeting by Coaches Bohler and Shirley, J. P. Cole, chairman of the Tech athletic committee, and Francis Mangham, Coushatta, retiring president of the club.

Announcement was made that all captains of any of the intercollegiate sport teams would be elected at a meeting of the club at the end of the year. It was also announced by Coach Bohler that the track team members this year would be recommended for extra award in the form of gold track shoes for going through the regular season without a loss and winning the third district S. I. A. A. title.

BROWN MILL TO PLAY CLARKS LUMBERJACKS

The Brown Paper Mill team, which yesterday defeated Louisiana Tech, will meet the strong Clarks Lumberjacks at the Brown park this afternoon. The game will start at 3:30 o'clock.

Manager Carey Phillips, who usually plays an infield position, announced last night that he probably would take the mound against the Lumberjacks.

The Safety Firsts defeated Clarks in a game earlier this season but the Lumberjacks have been strengthened by several new players recently and a close game is expected today.

A small admission charge will be made for the game today, Phillips said.

FERRIDAY HIGH TEAMS MAKE GOOD RECORDS

FERRIDAY, May 21 (Special)—With the closing of the local high school Friday, May 27, the Ferriday school has completed its best year in athletics in the history of the institution. Coach Hugh Bateman's football team were winners in every one of their games with the exception of the title contest with the Rayville Hornets.

The local basketball and track teams were winners of several tournaments and the track team captured the Class B championship at the Central Louisiana rally in Pineville. The girls, too, under the direction of Coach F. F. Thompson placed winning teams on the field and with most of the performers returning next year, the school expects to enjoy another successful season.

Golf as the STARS play it by ART KRENZ

Tenseness in the left side will prevent it from turning in the backswing. As the downswing is started the right side will then tighten and hinder the hipshift and free turn.

Let the left side relax as the club is taken to the top of the backswing, so that the left arm can do its share. In the downswing, replace the left foot early and let the left leg be ready to support the weight.

Concentrate on swinging the club with the arms. This will prevent a hurried swing.

THE NEW SKIPPER.

In the first place, Hopper is known as a hustler. He has a reputation of battling for every ball game and he is able to instill that scrappy spirit into his players. The Twins were hustling under Frank Kitchens and Hopper will have little difficulty in keeping up the old fighting spirit.

When the Southeastern league blew up, Hopper was leading the loop in individual hitting. He was clouting the well known apple to the tune of .417, which is quite some hitting, even in the Southeastern. He can prune off a few points from that figure and still be a mighty slugger in the Cotton States. Of course, no one expects him to maintain such a pace all season long but there is every indication that the new Monroe skipper will be up among the leaders when the final figures roll in.

In 1927 Clay Hopper furnished the hitting feature of the Three-Eye league. He was a member of the Danville club and one day he hit four home runs in one game, driving in ten runs.

Last year Hopper was manager of the Scottdale club of the Middle Atlantic league. You will remember that the Middle Atlantic tried the experiment of having 12 clubs in the circuit, so Hopper had plenty of competition. Notwithstanding the fact that there were almost 300 ball players performing in that league during the season, Hopper was the fifth hitter at the end of the season. His season's average was just .354. He participated in 126 games, hit 24 home runs, 26 doubles and 18 triples. He led the league in total bases with 293 and incidentally, Scottdale finished the season on top in team batting with a mark of .303, the only club in the circuit to hit over .300 for the season. His fielding mark for the season was .933. In 125 games in the outfield, he made 12 errors.

As manager of the Greensboro club of the Piedmont league in 1930, Hopper participated in 140 games and batted .355. He hit 23 home runs, 37 doubles and 15 triples, for 321 total bases.

From a personal standpoint, Hopper bears the reputation of being an extremely likeable person. He is 30 years old, is married and makes his winter home at Greenwood, Miss. He is five feet, eleven inches tall, weighs 175 pounds and has dark brown hair and brown eyes, if that means anything to you. He is a graduate of Mississippi A. and M. college and starred in football and basketball.

Taking everything into consideration, there isn't any reason why Hopper shouldn't make an instant hit here. Monroe won't be entirely new to him, for he was a member of the Laurel team back in 1929.

Clay will pay his first visit to Monroe since becoming manager of the team, next Monday, when the team has an off day. He will make his debut on the local diamond on May 28, when the Twins open a series with the Baton Rouge Standards.

BASEBALL HELPS

Detroit was having its internal troubles, as far as its officialdom was concerned, but now that the Tigers are right up there in the American league chase, all that's been ironed out.

At least, that's what Mayor Murphy of Detroit says. It seems the whole town is talking baseball and whenever councilmen gather to discuss important civic matters, the baseball talk tends to relieve the pressure. When two men sit side by side in the grandstand and pull for a baseball team, it's hard to face each other across the conference table and stage a political ruckus. Here's the result, as reported by William Braucher, sports editor of NEA Service:

"The other day Mayor Murphy sat at his desk, with a delegation waiting to confer with him at the long conference table in his office. The subject of the ball team was introduced.

"It's just the thing for Detroit right now," said His Honor. "Detroit has got a case of nerves. If we had not been careful we would have pulled some awful boners, like taking recreation facilities from children, closing the libraries and interfering with police, fire and health services.

"One of the things that brings us back to a wholesome balance is a winning ball team. It's 'Casey at the bat again.' Detroit always was a great baseball town.

"Now the Tigers are gripping the imagination again. They have a going team. It is fresh. There is Davis at first base and Rhiel at third, for example, to stimulate interest. They are beginning to bring the same color to the game that Ty Cobb brought in the old days.

"And if we had a glass of beer to go with it, because baseball and beer went together, that would get everybody off their nerves."

"And Councilman Smith: "Now they're predicting a pennant for Detroit, I haven't heard so much baseball discussion in 10 years—everywhere I go. It's like a drink of cool water after a long march."

"Then spake Councilman Lodge: 'The fact that they are up there fighting for the top is one of the most helpful things in the economic condition we now find ourselves in. The psychological effect of a winning team is wonderful.'"

BLACK BARONS BEAT MONARCHS IN OPENER

The Birmingham Black Barons stopped the Monroe Monarchs' winning streak yesterday at Casino park when they defeated the Monarchs by a score of 5-1. The Monarchs had won nine straight games before the Black Barons put the skids to them.

The game was a pitchers' duel until the sixth when a hit, an error and a misjudged ball in the sun-field caused the first two scores of the game. The Barons scored three more in the eighth. The Monarchs made their lone marker in the last frame when Saunders doubled and Parnell singled.

The Monarchs will take another crack at the Barons in a double header today, the first game starting at 2:30 o'clock. Manager Johnson stated that he will send Big Morris to the mound for the first game and use all the pitchers if necessary to stop the Barons. The gates will open at 1 o'clock to accommodate the fans.

TALLULAH GOLFERS PLAY HERE TODAY

Members of the Municipal Golf club play their first inter-city match of the season on their home course today when they meet golfers of the Tallulah Country club. Play will start promptly at 1 o'clock this afternoon.

Tallulah defeated the local golfers in an inter-city match last season, and Muny members are anxious to even the score. The local club has played one inter-city match this year, losing to Natchez golfers at Natchez last month.

Professional Lund Harper said last night that the matches would start promptly at the appointed hour, and he urged players to report on time. A large delegation of Tallulah golfers is expected to compete in the match.

The pro-amateur match will be played between Ward Edwards, Tallulah pro, and his partner, Kenneth Brown, and Harper and Luckey Royster. This match will start at 1:15 o'clock.

The local course is in excellent condition and some low scores are expected to be posted today, Harper said.

Prioleau Ellis, Jr., and Jimmie Harper, Harry Taylor and H. M. Manning, Fred Majors and Q. Henry, R. B. Wofford and Lloyd McDoniel, George Guerriero and Captain Harry Roberts, Jordan Barton and F. E. Maxwell, Victor Davis and Guy Campbell, Bishop Pipes and Rod Guy, Johnny Kramer and Ernest Eves, Ray Buce and W. C. Johnson, and Lund Harper and Lucky Royster.

Clay Hopper, recently appointed manager of the Monroe club, is ill at his home in Mobile and will be unable to join the local team until tomorrow, President D. Aubrey Haas was advised yesterday. Meanwhile, the Twins are in Baton Rouge under the leadership of Homer Ezzell.

Charley Barrett, Cardinal scout, joined the team at Baton Rouge yesterday. Catcher Rea, from Mobile, and Infielder Bilgere, a rookie from the Spring Hill college campus, also reported to the Twins yesterday. Barrett advised The World by telephone last night that several other players will be sent here.

BATON ROUGE, May 21 (Special)—The Standards jumped on Dick Florrid, veteran righthander, for three runs in the first inning today and the Twins couldn't overcome the early lead. Consequently, Baton Rouge won the first game of the series, 5 to 3.

Paul limited the Twins to seven hits, three of which were made by Homer Ezzell, who is in charge of the Monroe team until Manager Hopper arrives. Moses, fleet Monroe outfielder, made two hits with Fogelman and Florrid getting one each.

The Twins scored in the first inning when Moses singled, went to second on Fogelman's infield out and came home when Ezzell shot a sharp single into center field.

The Standards came right back and hopped on Florrid for three runs before he could settle down. After the hectic first frame, the little Monroe hurler pitched steady ball, giving up only eight hits during the entire game.

The Standards scored once in the second inning and made their fifth run in the fourth. Monroe scored in the fifth when West walked, went to second on Florrid's short single and came home on Moses' timely single to right.

The last run was scored in the eighth, Ezzell crossing the plate with the tally. He led off with a single, advanced to second and third on infield outs and scored on Hassler's bott at short.

Florrid struck out six Standards and issued only one base on balls. Paul fanned five and walked two.

The teams conclude the series Sunday. The first game was rained out Friday but the team managers tonight had not agreed on a double-header.

STAR OF WHITNEY STABLE DEFEATS CRACK FIELD OF 6

Sun Meadow Is Second and Mate Finishes Third in Metropolitan Mile

By Orlo Robertson
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—Equipoise, the "Big Train" of the C. V. Whitney stable, today thundered to the fourth straight and most impressive victory of his comeback campaign, defeating a crack field of six in the Metropolitan Mile at Belmont park.

Outrun for six furlongs, Equipoise came through the stretch with a burst of speed that left Mrs. Katherine E. Hitt's Sun Meadow, A. C. Bostwick's Mate and four other high class performers staggering.

Sun Meadow passed the judges' stand three lengths behind the brilliant Whitney colt. Another one and one-half lengths to the rear trailed Mate, twice conqueror of Twenty Grand last year. Mate was ridden by Pete Bostwick, millionaire amateur jockey and brother of the colt's owner.

Equipoise, favorite at 3 to 5, stepped the mile in the good time of 1:37 under the heavy package of 127 pounds, one less than Mate carried. His youthful owner received $7225.

Andy Schuttinger's Pilate, a selling plater a year ago, ran like a winner for six furlongs, but weakened and finished fourth.

SUNTICA WINS OAKS

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 21 (AP)—Suntica, owned by Willis Sharpe Kilmer, won the 58th running of the Kentucky Oaks at Churchill Downs today from eight other fillies. I Say was second and Depression third. Time for the mile and an eighth was 152 1-5.

BROWN NINE BEATS TECH BULLDOGS, 4-2

RUSTON, May 21 (Special)—Driving in four runs before a shower prevented continuation of play, Brown Paper Mill of Brownsville defeated Louisiana Tech here this afternoon, 4 to 2. The diamond attraction was the final sport event of the college year for any Bulldog squad.

Brown got the jump on Tech in the first inning and scored three times on a quartet of hits. Frickie, hitting a double, and McLaurin a single, sent the runners across home plate. Frickie hit one over left field fence in the third for the fourth tally for the visitors.

Proudhomme, Tech chunker, doubled in the second with two on to account for the local's runs of the day. A temporary halt of activities was called in the fourth but soon resumed when weather conditions became more favorable.

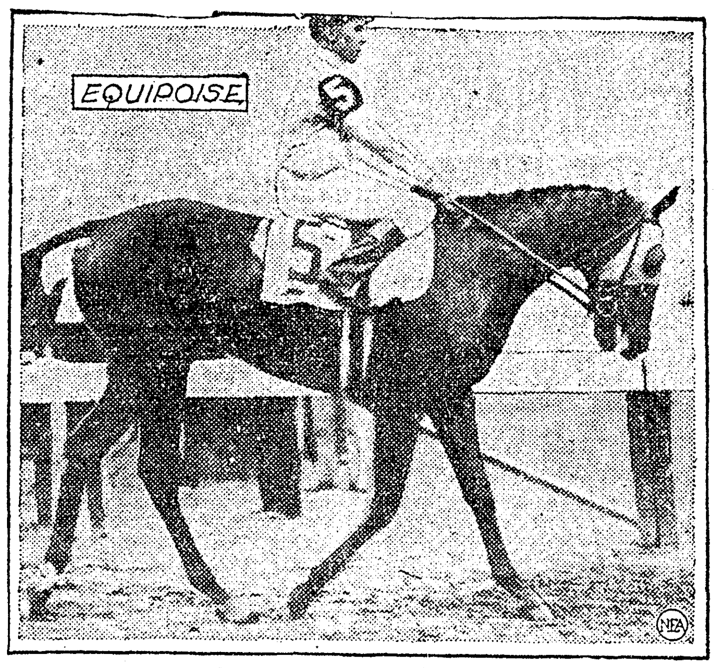
WINS METROPOLITAN MILE



Equipoise, star of the C. V. Whitney stable, won his fourth consecutive triumph of his comeback campaign yesterday when he defeated a crack field in the Metropolitan mile, feature of the Belmont card. Starting slowly, Equipoise came on with a rush to beat Sun Meadow and Mate by three lengths. The Whitney star ran the mile in 1:37, carrying 127 pounds.

WINNSBORO MEETS KRAFTMEN TODAY

First Double Header of Big Six Schedule to Be Played at Winnsboro

WINNSBORO, May 21 (Special)—The first doubleheader baseball game of the local Big Six season will begin Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. on the Winnsboro diamond. Bastrop will meet the Franklin parish entry in both contests. While no mound assignments have as yet been announced, it is thought that "Lefty" Ward and "Slim" Larkin will take up the burden for the locals.

Larkin pitched a masterful game at Oak Grove Thursday, it is reported, when the Winnsboro club lost their first game of the season in a 10-inning contest. The tall right hander allowed the Lions only eight hits, but his team mates were credited with six errors behind him and all of them were costly ones, it is said. Larkin, who is well liked by Winnsboro fans, is said to have refused an offer recently to play organized baseball, preferring to stay with the local club.

As a result of the poor fielding at Oak Grove it is expected that several shifts in the lineup may be made in Sunday's games. Manager Eckhardt, off to a great start in the first half race, is determined to take no chances and intends to make every effort to win as many ball games as possible.

With the reporting here next week of Caldwell as catcher and Blair to play as yet an unnamed position the Winnsboro club will have attained its strength, that is for the present at least. Caldwell is coach at Jonesboro high school and will report at the end of the term, while Blair is a student at L. S. U. and will finish his scholastic work before reporting.

The crowds at the games are reported on the increase and bid fair to surpass the records made last year when Winnsboro was a member of the Central Louisiana league.

MISSOURI SELECTS CARIDEO AS COACH

COLUMBIA, Mo., May 21 (AP)—Frank Carideo, famous Notre Dame quarterback, was named head football coach of the University of Missouri today.

Two knotty problems will face him in his new position. The first is the task of changing Missouri's style of play to that of the late Knute Rockne and the second, to overcome the effects of two years of gridiron adversity through which the university has passed.

He will also be handicapped by lack of spring practice, beginning next Monday and closing Friday, when final exminations will call the squad to class rooms.

But these hurdles are not expected to daunt the young athlete who directed Rockne's last two teams to 19 straight victories as a player.

His selection as the successor to Gwinn Henry, who resigned several weeks ago, was announced through the office of President Walter Williams.

The salary which Carideo will receive was not announced, but it is believed to be around $6000, or $2000 less than Henry was getting.

He comes to Missouri as one of the youngest coaches in the country, and perhaps the youngest at a major institution. Yet his youth—he is only 24 years old—was no handicap to him last fall as backfield coach at Purdue university of the Big Ten conference.

LEAGUE MAY BE FORMED

FERRIDAY, May 21 (Special)—Formation of a six club league to be known as the North Louisiana-Natchez loop has been proposed by the management of the Natchez, Ferriday, Wisner, Vidalia, Waterproof and Jonesville clubs, and plans are being formulated for the organization of the league in the near future. The cities are within close proximity and traveling expenses, it was pointed out, would be light.

TIGER THINCLADS SCORE 38 POINTS IN ATLANTA MEET

Three New Records Set in Southern Field Day; Tulane Finishes Sixth

By Dillon Graham
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

ATLANTA, May 21 (AP)—Louisiana State university today showed well distributed strength in many events to spread-eagle a fast field and win the Southern Conference track championship. The Tigers scored 38 points.

The decisive victory gave the Louisianians their fourth conference championship in the past six seasons. The Baton Rouge team held the title for three successive years, starting in 1927.

Duke university, with only a five-man team, came second with 27 points, while Auburn was third with 24 and North Carolina fourth with 23. Tulane, the 1931 winner, was sixth, with 16 points, just behind Georgia, which had 21.

Although heavy rains for the past few days had left the track slow and the field soggy, three new records were made and two were tied.

Moreau, Louisiana's fast stepping hurdler, hung up a new mark over the high timbers in 14.9 seconds to erase the 1926 march of 15 seconds by Baskin of Auburn. In one of the preliminaries in this event Stewart of Auburn equalled Baskin's time.

Jenkins of Florida broke the four-year-old discus record of 136 feet 6 1-4 inches made by Lund of V. P. I., when he tossed the plate 142 feet 9 inches. Legore of North Carolina threw the javelin 195 feet 3-5 inch to better the 193 feet 8 1-4 inch mark of Anderson of Georgia, made in 1928. Brownlee of Duke equalled his own conference record of last year in the low hurdles in 24 seconds flat.

The Louisianians were off to a fine start, gathering eight points in the first two events, and were never threatened after the meet was half way completed. L. S. U. scored first places in the high hurdles, 220 yard dash and shot put, but a large total of low points picked up in the other events kept their lead safe.

This meet was hard on some of the favorites. The preliminaries to the 100-yard dash saw such stars as Kelly of Kentucky, who won a year ago; Owens, of Georgia, Smith of Alabama, and Brownlee of Duke, fail to qualify, while a little heralded speedster from Clemson, Lyn, nosed out Farmer of North Carolina and Stockwell of Louisiana to win the final dash.

Marland, of North Carolina, favored to take the quarter mile, ran only third to Fulmer of Duke, who won in the near record time of 49.2 seconds. Zimmerman of Tulane, who had pole vaulted 13 feet 6 inches this season, could do no better than 12 feet 9 3-4 inches in winning this event today, while he placed only fifth in the broad jump, which he was expected to win.

Duke won the mile relay, after a great race with Florida. The Floridians were off to a good lead, but in the third lap, Brownlee of Duke chopped away the lead held by Boyette of Florida and handed his final runer several yards advantage.

Graham Batchelor of Georgia was high point man of the meet with 10 points. Fulmer of Duke and Stockwell and Moreau of Louisiana State had eight points.

Equipoise Wins Fourth Straight Victory of Comeback Campaign in Belmont Feature

Sun Meadow Is Second and Mate Finishes Third in Metropolitan Mile

By Orlo Robertson
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—Equipoise, the "Big Train" of the C. V. Whitney stable, today thundered to the fourth straight and most impressive victory of his comeback campaign, defeating a crack field of six in the Metropolitan Mile at Belmont park.

Outrun for six furlongs, Equipoise came through the stretch with a burst of speed that left Mrs. Katherine E. Hitt's Sun Meadow, A. C. Bostwick's Mate and four other high class performers staggering.

Sun Meadow passed the judges' stand three lengths behind the brilliant Whitney colt. Another one and one-half lengths to the rear trailed Mate, twice conqueror of Twenty Grand last year. Mate was ridden by Pete Bostwick, millionaire amateur jockey and brother of the colt's owner.

Equipoise, favorite at 3 to 5, stepped the mile in the good time of 1:37 under the heavy package of 127 pounds, one less than Mate carried. His youthful owner received $7225.

Andy Schuttinger's Pilate, a selling plater a year ago, ran like a winner for six furlongs, but weakened and finished fourth.

SUNTICA WINS OAKS

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 21 (AP)—Suntica, owned by Willis Sharpe Kilmer, won the 58th running of the Kentucky Oaks at Churchill Downs today from eight other fillies. I Say was second and Depression third. Time for the mile and an eighth was 152 1-5.

BROWN NINE BEATS TECH BULLDOGS, 4-2

RUSTON, May 21 (Special)—Driving in four runs before a shower prevented continuation of play, Brown Paper Mill of Brownsville defeated Louisiana Tech here this afternoon, 4 to 2. The diamond attraction was the final sport event of the college year for any Bulldog squad.

Brown got the jump on Tech in the first inning and scored three imes on a quartet of hits. Frickie, hitting a double, and McLaurin a single, sent the runners across home plate. Frickie hit one over left field fence in the third for the fourth tally for the visitors.

Proudhomme, Tech chunker, doubled in the second with two on to account for the local's runs of the day. A temporary halt of activities was called in the fourth but soon resumed when weather conditions became more favorable.

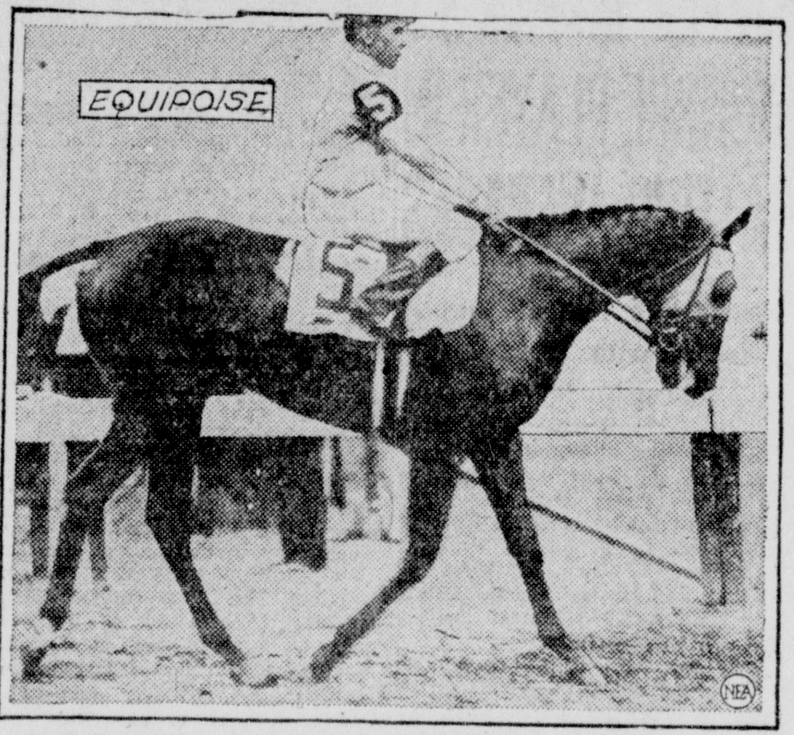
WINS METROPOLITAN MILE



Equipoise, star of the C. V. Whitney stable, won his fourth consecutive triumph of his comeback campaign yesterday when he defeated a crack field in the Metropolitan mile, feature of the Belmont card. Starting slowly, Equipoise came on with a rush to beat Sun Meadow and Mate by three lengths. The Whitney star ran the mile in 1:37, carrying 127 pounds.

MISSOURI SELECTS CARIDEO AS COACH

COLUMBIA, Mo., May 21 (AP)—Frank Carideo, famous Notre Dame quarterback, was named head football coach of the University of Missouri today.

Two knotty problems will face him in his new position. The first is the task of changing Missouri's style of play to that of the late Knute Rockne and the second, to overcome the effects of two years of gridiron adversity through which the university has passed.

He will also be handicapped by lack of spring practice, beginning next Monday and closing Friday, when final exminations will call the squad to class rooms.

But these hurdles are not expected to daunt the young athlete who directed Rockne's last two teams to 19 straight victories as a player.

His selection as the successor to Gwinn Henry, who resigned several weeks ago, was announced through the office of President Walter Williams.

The salary which Carideo will receive was not announced, but it is believed to be around $6000, or $2000 less than Henry was getting.

He comes to Missouri as one of the youngest coaches in the country, and perhaps the youngest at a major institution. Yet his youth—he is only 24 years old—was no handicap to him last fall as backfield coach at Purdue university of the Big Ten conference.

WINNSBORO MEETS KRAFTMEN TODAY

First Double Header of Big Six Schedule to Be Played at Winnsboro

WINNSBORO, May 21 (Special)—The first doubleheader baseball game of the local Big Six season will begin Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. on the Winnsboro diamond. Bastrop will meet the Franklin parish entry in both contests. While no mound assignments have as yet been announced, it is thought that "Lefty" Ward and "Slim" Larkin will take up the burden for the locals.

Larkin pitched a masterful game at Oak Grove Thursday, it is reported, when the Winnsboro club lost their first game of the season in a 10-inning contest. The tall right hander allowed the Lions only eight hits, but his team mates were credited with six errors behind him and all of them were costly ones, it is said. Larkin, who is well liked by Winnsboro fans, is said to have refused an offer recently to play organized baseball, preferring to stay with the local club.

As a result of the poor fielding at Oak Grove it is expected that several shifts in the lineup may be made in Sunday's games. Manager Eckhardt, off to a great start in the first half race, is determined to take no chances and intends to make every effort to win as many ball games as possible.

With the reporting here next week of Caldwell as catcher and Blair to play as yet an unnamed position the Winnsboro club will have attained its strength, that is for the present at least. Caldwell is coach at Jonesboro high school and will report at the end of the term, while Blair is a student at L. S. U. and will finish his scholastic work before reporting.

The crowds at the games are reported on the increase and bid fair to surpass the records made last year when Winnsboro was a member of the Central Louisiana league.

LEAGUE MAY BE FORMED

FERRIDAY, May 21 (Special)—Formation of a six club league to be known as the North Louisiana-Natchez loop has been proposed by the management of the Natchez, Ferriday, Wisner, Vidalia, Waterproof and Jonesville clubs, and plans are being formulated for the organization of the league in the near future. The cities are within close proximity and traveling expenses, it was pointed out, would be light.

TIGER THINCLADS SCORE 38 POINTS IN ATLANTA MEET

Three New Records Set in Southern Field Day; Tulane Finishes Sixth

By Dillon Graham
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

ATLANTA, May 21 (AP)—Louisiana State university today showed well distributed strength in many events to spread-eagle a fast field and win the Southern Conference track championship. The Tigers scored 38 points.

The decisive victory gave the Louisianians their fourth conference championship in the past six seasons. The Baton Rouge team held the title for three successive years, starting in 1927.

Duke university, with only a five-man team, came second with 27 points, while Auburn was third with 24 and North Carolina fourth with 23. Tulane, the 1931 winner, was sixth, with 16 points, just behind Georgia, which had 21.

Although heavy rains for the past few days had left the track slow and the field soggy, three new records were made and two were tied.

Moreau, Louisiana's fast stepping hurdler, hung up a new mark over the high timbers in 14.9 seconds to erase the 1926 march of 15 seconds by Baskin of Auburn. In one of the preliminaries in this event Stewart of Auburn equalled Baskin's time.

Jenkins of Florida broke the four-year-old discus record of 136 feet 6 1-4 inches made by Lund of V. P. I., when he tossed the plate 142 feet 9 inches. Legore of North Carolina threw the javelin 195 feet 3-5 inch to better the 193 feet 8 1-4 inch mark of Anderson of Georgia, made in 1928. Brownlee of Duke equalled his own conference record of last year in the low hurdles in 24 seconds flat.

The Louisianians were off to a fine start, gathering eight points in the first two events, and were never threatened after the meet was half way completed. L. S. U. scored first places in the high hurdles, 220 yard dash and shot put, but a large total of low points picked up in the other events kept their lead safe.

This meet was hard on some of the favorites. The preliminaries to the 100-yard dash saw such stars as Kelly of Kentucky, who won a year ago; Owens, of Georgia, Smith of Alabama, and Brownlee of Duke, fail to qualify, while a little heralded speedster from Clemson, Lyn, nosed out Farmer of North Carolina and Stockwell of Louisiana to win the final dash.

Marland, of North Carolina, favored to take the quarter mile, ran only third to Fulmer of Duke, who won in the near record time of 49.2 seconds. Zimmerman of Tulane, who had pole vaulted 13 feet 6 inches this season, could do no better than 12 feet 9 3-4 inches in winning this event today, while he placed only fifth in the broad jump, which he was expected to win.

Duke won the mile relay, after a great race with Florida. The Floridians were off to a good lead, but in the third lap, Brownlee of Duke chopped away the lead held by Boyette of Florida and handed his final runer several yards advantage.

Graham Batchelor of Georgia was high point man of the meet with 10 points. Fulmer of Duke and Stockwell and Moreau of Louisiana State had eight points.

Walker's Short Stature Gives Heavyweights Welcome Alibi for Not Fighting Him

By Robert Edgren

It's Mickey Walker's hard luck that he's only five feet seven. If he had even three or four inches more height nothing could keep him out of a match for the world's heavyweight championship. On fighting ability he has at least as much right as Jack Sharkey in the ring against Schmeling. The fact that he is only 5 feet 7 and weighs at the most 170 pounds gives dodgers a very comfortable alibi. They can look over Mickey's head at taller and easier marks, with the explanation that Mickey is "too small" to be taken seriously. They don't have to take him seriously as long as they can dodge facing him in the ring. Within ropes he'd have to be taken seriously by any of them. Jack Sharkey didn't take Mickey very seriously last July, and was lucky to be given a draw by the two judges, when the referee figured Mickey leading in 11 of the 15 rounds. Personally I'd take the referee's judgment in figuring the ability shown by Sharkey and Walker, the referee being Arthur Donovan, son of former world's middleweight champion, Mike Donovan, and a good clever professional himself a few years ago, as well as boxing instructor for years at the N. Y. A. C. and a referee with plenty of experience in handling big fights. The referee usually has a better line on a fight than the judges can have. The judges are in a fixed position; the referee is moving around with the fighters, close to the action where he can more in detail than any man sitting at the ringside.

But no matter how good a fighter he is, Mickey is only a little fellow compared to the behemoths, and it is very embarrassing for them when they can't handle him. Mickey is a really great fighter, with plenty of skill, speed, strength, endurance, aggressiveness and punch. They used to call Joe Walcott "The Giant Killer" because he knocked out Joe Choynski, a clever 165 pound heavyweight. Walker is a better giant killer than Walcott ever was and could have beaten men Walcott couldn't beat. Sensational as he was, Walcott lost a lot of fights to welters, middleweights and heavyweights, and few of these men were in Mickey's class.

The heavyweights can overlook Walker because he was a welter and a middleweight champion and hasn't much outgrown the middleweight class, and because he's only 5 feet 7 inches tall. That last, after all, is the talking point against considering Mickey seriously as a little contender. We've been running to heavyweights a foot taller, like Campolo and Carnera, and have been taking height and bulk for fighting ability. They haven't shown the fighting ability, but the bulk is still impressive. Jimmy Maloney and Jack Sharkey showed up Carnera, and Risko beat Campolo. Tex Rickard called Risko "The Wrecker" because of the way Risko spoiled his plans by beating Jack Sharkey and some of the other bigger men Rickard was trying to build up into heavyweight title shots.

Walker was a great welterweight but outgrew the class. He was one of the best middleweight champions we ever had, and dropped his title because there was no more competition for him at that weight. Among the heavies he has done rather well. He beat Johnny Risko twice. He knocked out K. O. Christner in a round. He beat Bearcat Wright, the big Omaha dark menace. He knocked out Jack Gagnon in a round. He gave Jack Sharkey a tough fifteen rounds in that "draw" fight. He knocked out Jimmy Maloney in two rounds. Maloney had fought twenty rounds with Carnera without being on the floor, except once when he missed Carnera with a right hand swing and fell down through his own misplaced exertion. He was dropped by a right hand crack on the chin in the first round of his recent fight with Kingfish Levinsky but got up, outfought Levinsky and won the fight. That was a pretty good test of a fighter. Any man can be dropped if he's hit hard enough on the right spot, but the fellow who can come up dazed and fight his way to a win is a fighter.

There is some precedent for the idea that a heavyweight doesn't need to be six feet tall or weigh over 190 pounds to be up among the champions. Tom Sharkey was only an inch and a half taller than Mickey Walker and weighed 182 pounds, but he fought the greatest heavyweight, Jim Jeffries, [illegible] and gave Jim two very tough battles. In fact Jeffries often said Sharkey worried him more than any other man he ever fought because he always kept coming and his squat build made him hard to hit. That's some of Walker's advantage. He is built like a heavyweight in his 5 feet 7 inches, has the hitting power of a heavyweight, and is [illegible] fighting naturally. [illegible] Dempsey tried to [illegible] a crouch-down out of [illegible] man's punches and [illegible] for a plunging body attack.

This is Mickey's twelfth year of fighting. He will be 32 in July. The fact that he won the world's welterweight championship in his second year, and ten years afterward is being enthusiastically dodged by the "leading heavyweights," including the heavyweight champion, deserves a place among the Miracles of Sport.

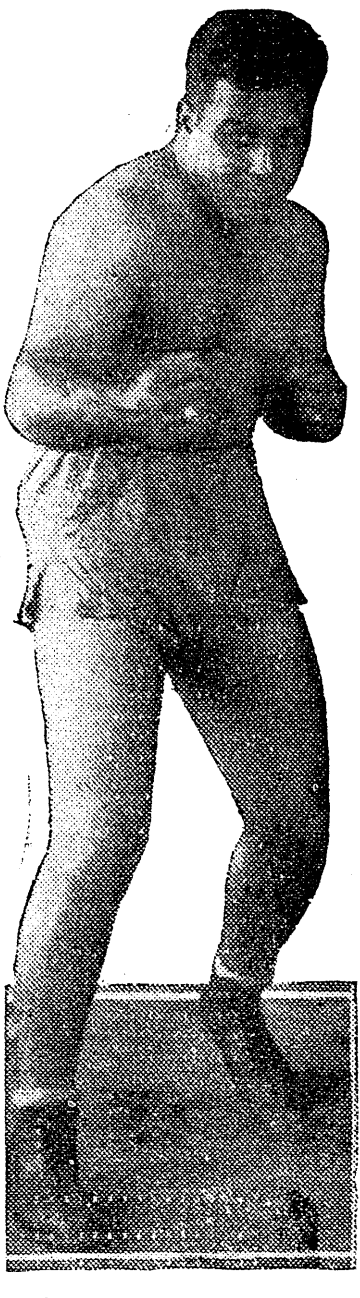
L. S. U. BOXER



Ed Khoury, Louisiana State university heavyweight, will be the feature attraction on a boxing card at Rayville on June 10, meeting Earl Brimberry, 191-pound battler of Alto, in the main event. On the same card, Dave Mitchell will meet Sam Kennedy. Mitchell also is a L. S. U. athlete. The card will consist only of amateur bouts, fought under A. A. U. rules.

TWILIGHT LEAGUE TO MEET MONDAY

Schedule and Rules to Be Adopted at Meeting of Team Captains

Manager of the various teams which have entered the Twilight league, sponsored by the Y's Men's club here, will meet at the Weaks building at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon to formulate plans for the coming schedule.

Harris Tyson, in charge of the league, said last night that ten games may enter the circuit. At least eight clubs will form the league, he said.

Notices of the meeting have been mailed all managers who have asked to enter teams in the league, Tyson said, and those who have not notified him but wish to enter teams are asked to attend the meeting.

A schedule will be adopted at Monday's meeting and league rules will be drawn up, it was said.

Teams which already have entered the league are as follows:

Y's Men, Methodist Men's Bible class, Missouri Pacific Boosters, West Monroe Kiwanis club, Lions club, Grotto and Monroe Kiwanis club. Teams representing the Firemen and the Young Men's Business class of the First Baptist church also are expected to enter teams in the league.

FERRIDAY BLACK CATS PLAY AT JENA TODAY

FERRIDAY, May 21 (Special)—With a rejuvenated team including the addition of John Clayton and Eugene [illegible], Copiah Lincoln junior college stars, home for their vacations, and aided by the addition of "Tight" Caldwell, a new hurler, and several other veterans, the Ferriday Black Cats hope to win their first game of the season Sunday afternoon when they go to Jena for a game with the Jena Giants on the Jena diamond at 4 o'clock.

Clayton, a catcher, and [illegible], an outfielder, arrived from Wesson, Miss., where they have been attending school, on Thursday, and both will be in the lineup Sunday. Manager Freemont Scott and Field Manager Bucky King ran the team through a light workout every day this week, and the players are showing decided improvement.

SPORTS NINE DEFEATS FAIRBANKS TEAM, 11-3

Fairbanks was held to six hits, three of which were made by A. Stewart, Fairbanks outfielder. Watkins, of the Sports, also made three hits.

AMERICAN WOMEN DEFEAT BRITONS

Yankee Stars Fall Before English Golfers But Lesser Lights Win

WENTWORTH, SURREY, Eng., May 21 (AP)—Although her stars met defeat, America's strongly balanced team of women golfers today fought its way through a melange of English weather to defeat England's best, 5 1-2 to 3 1-2, in their first official team match.

The invaders made a clean sweep of three Scotch foursomes in the morning and piled up a sufficient lead to stand off a determined stand by the English women in singles in the afternoon. Victory in two of the six singles matches and a half in another established the American's team triumph.

The morning matches were played in a bright early summer sunshine, but a light rain fell through the afternoon and caused a falling off in the brilliant scoring that marked the play in the foursomes.

England's only consolation lay in the drubbing administered Mrs. Glenna Collet Vare by her old nemesis, the great Joyce Wethered. The American star, who at one time or another has beaten practically every noteworthy rival except the tall Englishwoman, was caught in a maze of bunkers and was an easy victim, 6 and 4.

Helen Hicks, America's national champion, also encountered defeat at the hands of Enid Wilson, English titleholder, 2 and 1, but not without a bitter struggle. Miss Wilson's victory came on the seventeenth green, where the American champion took three punts to get down. Both registered fine 36's for the first nine.

In the long run, the victory was decided by the fact that the supposed weak end of the American team held up better than that of the British side. Virginia Van Wie's win over Wanda Morgan, 2 to 1, and Mrs. Leona Cheney's 4 and 3 triumph over Elsie Corlett clinched the series. Mrs. Opal Hill gained a half against Molly Gourlay after a hot 18-hole fight.

Diana Fishwick, former English champion, accounted for her side's third singles victory when she defeated Maureen Orcutt, 4 and 3. The English girl played steady golf, despite an arm injury that had made it doubtful she would compete in the matches.

FAIRBANKS NINE WINS OVER W. MONROE, 7-5

Cole, hurling for Fairbanks, held West Monroe to six hits. His mates made nine errors, which were largely responsible for the Independents' scoring. The score was 5 to 4 in the ninth inning when Fairbanks scored two runs and West Monroe one.

WOMEN STARS GATHER FOR HOT SPRINGS PLAY

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., May 21 (AP)—A field of some 200 women including several state and sectional titleholders will start play here Monday in the sixth trans-Mississippi golf tournament.

The fight for the championship is to be a wide open affair, since Mrs. O. S. Hill of Kansas City, the 1931 title holder is in England as a member of the United women's golf team.

Heading the list of nationally known stars here for the tournament is Mrs. Charles Dennehy of Lake Forrest, Ill., who as Miss Virginia Wilson won the Canadian women's title in 1928 and finished as runner up in the women's western of the same year.

WATERPROOF CLUB TO PLAY AT JONESVILLE

JONESVILLE, May 21 (Special)—Sunday afternoon Manager Charlie Testa's Waterproof Tigers will come to Jonesville for a game with Dr. R. H. Enzer's Jonesville Lumberjacks.

Waterproof has won three games in a row, beating Ferriday twice and winning from the Monroe News-Star—World Printers. Jonesville has captured two out of three games.

TIGERS BEAT CHISOX

CHICAGO, May 21 (AP)—Vic Sorrell held the White Sox to five hits today and Detroit took the second straight game of the series 5 to 1. Jonathan Stone, who helped beat them yesterday with a home run, came back today with a triple, double and a single to drive in two runs.

BALL LEADS FIELD OF 20 OPEN QUALIFYERS

ATLANTA, May 21 (AP)—Errie Ball of Atlanta, Southeastern Professional Golf association champion, heads a field of 20 players who will enter the qualifying round for the national open championship at East Lake course here June 6.

Two places are open for the golfers participating here.

Two 18-hole rounds will furnish the qualifying test.

Eddie Wiseman of the Chicago Shamrocks scored 36 points to lead the American Hockey league scorers, but his total was 11 less than that of Gordie Brydson of Chicago for the 1939-21 season.

EZZELL IS FIRST MONROE PLAYER IN BATTING AVERAGES

Crouch Has Perfect Hurling Record With Three Victories, No Defeats

Dick Burrows, Pine Bluff first baseman, tops the individual hitters of the Cotton States league after the second week of play, with a mark of .410, according to official averages as released by Irwin M. Howe, of Chicago, official statistician, yesterday. Games of last Sunday are included in the averages.

Gene Walker, Port Arthur pitcher, is the leader but Walker had participated in but eight games when the figures were compiled. Walker's average is .529. Burrows is followed by Costa, Vicksburg, with .396; Sain, Baton Rouge, .391; and Sutherlin, Vicksburg, last week's leader, with .386. Shaw, of El Dorado, is tied with Sutherlin.

Monroe is third in team batting and third in team fielding, the Twin hitting average beng .275 and their fielding mark .946. Pine Bluff leads in both team batting and fielding, with an average of .302 in hitting and .965 in fielding. Vicksburg is second in both departments, with Baton Rouge, Port Arthur and El Dorado following Monroe in that order in both batting and fielding.

Homer Ezzell is leading the Twins in hitting, his mark being .349 at the end of the second week. Tom Pyle is a close second with .346, and Gray, Capps and West complete the list of .300 hitters for Monroe. Their averages are .324, .319 and .317, respectively.

However, the Twins have several leaders in other departments in the averages. Pyle led in home runs with three to his credit, while Dunbar had hit two. Pyle also was tied with Washington and Atwood, both of Baton Rouge, for total bases with 33. Capps and Dunbar were in a two-way tie for the lead in stolen bases, each having swiped six. Monroe led other teams in that respect, the team having stolen 23 bases during the first 12 games. The Twins also had worked opposing pitchers for 47 bases on balls to lead in that department. Monroe had the most assists, 155.

Bill Crouch, Monroe righthander, tied with Berry, of Pine Bluff, and Paul, of Baton Rouge, for the hurling leadership each having won three games and lost none. Dick Florrid, recent acquisition from the Wichita Falls club, was credited with one victory and no defeats for a perfect record.

Rawlins, of Pine Bluff, is first in runs, with 14, and Pyle and Persons, of Pine Bluff, are second with 13.

Following are the official averages, as of May 16:

NEWS-STAR PRINTERS TO MEET WINNFIELD

The News-Star Printers will go to Winnfield today for a game with the Winnfield Miners.

In a previous game this season, Caldwell, Winnfield hurler, held the Printers hitless and the local team is out for revenge today.

WATERPROOF WINS AGAIN.

WATERPROOF, May 21 (Special)—Wisner's newly organized baseball club was the latest victim of the Waterprof Tigers here Thursday afternoon, Manager Charlie Testa's Bengals beating the Franklin parish club 12 to 4 before a large crowd. To[illegible]ing two Wisner hurlers, Broadnack, a lefthander who started, and Disch, a righthander who pitched the last three innings, for 13 hits, the Tigers took an early lead and were never headed.

TRACK STARS IN OLYMPIC TRYOUTS

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 21 (AP)—Seven track and field stars qualified today in the mid-south Olympic tryouts here at Ferguson field by equalling or bettering the standard requirements eight times.

Jack Burnett, sprinting flash from the University of Mississippi bettered both the 100 and 200-meter run qualifying time. He ran one heat of the 100-meter dash in 10.6 seconds, two-tenths of a second faster than the required time and finished the 200 meters in 21.5 or with one-tenth of a second to spare.

Curtice Rankin of Ouachita college, Arkansas, ran the first heat of the 100 meter event in 10.88 and Harold High of Southwestern of Memphis, finished with the same time in the second heat.

Steed Rountree, another Ouachita athlete, negotiated the 800 meters in one minute 55.4 seconds, six-tenths of a second faster than the standard time.

Glenn Rice, of Dumas, Ark., threw the javelin 194 feet 4 inches to beat the standard of 190 feet.

The two entries in the 400-meter low hurdles both bettered the required time of 55 seconds. Arthur Burch of Arkansas Tech took them in 53.7 seconds and Ben Hemsley, unattached runner of Memphis, in 54.1.

More University of Iowa fall and winter athletes than ever before are now sporting major "I" sweaters. Fifty-four men, in seven branches, have been honored.

Walker's Short Stature Gives Heavyweights Welcome Alibi for Not Fighting Him

By Robert Edgren

It's Mickey Walker's hard luck that he's only five feet seven. If he had even three or four inches more height nothing could keep him out of a match for the world's heavyweight championship. On fighting ability he has at least as much right as Jack Sharkey in the ring against Schmeling. The fact that he is only 5 feet 7 and weighs at the most 170 pounds gives dodgers a very comfortable alibi. They can look over Mickey's head at taller and easier marks, with the explanation that Mickey is "too small" to be taken seriously. They don't have to take him seriously as long as they can dodge facing him in the ring. Within ropes he'd have to be taken seriously by any of them. Jack Sharkey didn't take Mickey very seriously last July, and was lucky to be given a draw by the two judges, when the referee figured Mickey leading in 11 of the 15 rounds. Personally I'd take the referee's judgment in figuring the ability shown by Sharkey and Walker, the referee being Arthur Donovan, son of former world's middleweight champion, Mike Donovan, and a good clever professional himself a few years ago, as well as boxing instructor for years at the N. Y. A. C. and a referee with plenty of experience in handling big fights. The referee usually has a better line on a fight than the judges can have. The judges are in a fixed position; the referee is moving around with the fighters, close to the action where he can more in detail than any man sitting at the ringside.

But no matter how good a fighter he is, Mickey is only a little fellow compared to the behemoths, and it is very embarrassing for them when they can't handle him. Mickey is a really great fighter, with plenty of skill, speed, strength, endurance, aggressiveness and punch. They used to call Joe Walcott "The Giant Killer" because he knocked out Joe Choynski, a clever 165 pound heavyweight. Walker is a better giant killer than Walcott ever was and could have beaten men Walcott couldn't beat. Sensational as he was, Walcott lost a lot of fights to welters, middleweights and heavyweights, and few of these men were in Mickey's class.

The heavyweights can overlook Walker because he was a welter and a middleweight champion and hasn't much outgrown the middleweight class, and because he's only 5 feet 7 inches tall. That last, after all, is the talking point against considering Mickey seriously as a little contender. We've been running to heavyweights a foot taller, like Campolo and Carnera, and have been taking height and bulk for fighting ability. They haven't shown the fighting ability, but the bulk is still impressive. Jimmy Maloney and Jack Sharkey showed up Carnera, and Risko beat Campolo. Tex Rickard called Risko "The Wrecker" because of the way Risko spoiled his plans by beating Jack Sharkey and some of the other bigger men Rickard was trying to build up into heavyweight title shots.

Walker was a great welterweight but outgrew the class. He was one of the best middleweight champions we ever had, and dropped his title because there was no more competition for him at that weight. Among the heavies he has done rather well. He beat Johnny Risko twice. He knocked out K. O. Christner in a round. He beat Bearcat Wright, the big Omaha dark menace. He knocked out Jack Gagnon in a round. He gave Jack Sharkey a tough fifteen rounds in that "draw" fight. He knocked out Jimmy Maloney in two rounds. Maloney had fought twenty rounds with Carnera without being on the floor, except once when he missed Carnera with a right hand swing and fell down through his own misplaced exertion. He was dropped by a right hand crack on the chin in the first round of his recent fight with Kingfish Levinsky but got up, outfought Levinsky and won the fight. That was a pretty good test of a fighter. Any man can be dropped if he's hit hard enough on the right spot, but the fellow who can come up dazed and fight his way to a win is a fighter.

There is some precedent for the idea that a heavyweight doesn't need to be six feet tall or weigh over 190 pounds to be up among the champions. Tom Sharkey was only an inch and a half taller than Mickey Walker and weighed 182 pounds, but he fought the greatest heavyweight, Jim Jeffries, 20 and 25 rounds and gave Jim two very tough battles. In fact Jeffries often says Sharkey worried him more than any other man he ever fought because he always kept coming and his squat build made him hard to hit. This is one of Walker's advantages. He is built like a heavyweight in his 5 feet 7 inches, has the hitting power of a heavyweight, and is hard to hit. Fighting naturally, he's in the position Dempsey tried to get by using a crouch-down out of line with a tall man's punches and in fine position for a plunging body attack.

This is Mickey's twelfth year of fighting. He will be 32 in July. The fact that he won the world's welterweight championship in his second year, and ten years afterward is being enthusiastically dodged by the "leading heavyweights," including the heavyweight champion, deserves a place among the Miracles of Sport.

L. S. U. BOXER

Ed Khoury, Louisiana State university heavyweight, will be the feature attraction on a boxing card at Rayville on June 10, meeting Earl Brimberry, 191-pound battler of Alto, in the main event. On the same card, Dave Mitchell will meet Sam Kennedy. Mitchell also is a L. S. U. athlete. The card will consist only of amateur bouts, fought under A. A. U. rules.

TWILIGHT LEAGUE TO MEET MONDAY

Schedule and Rules to Be Adopted at Meeting of Team Captains

Manager of the various teams which have entered the Twilight league, sponsored by the Y's Men's club here, will meet at the Weaks building at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon to formulate plans for the coming schedule.

Harris Tyson, in charge of the league, said last night that ten games may enter the circuit. At least eight clubs will form the league, he said.

Notices of the meeting have been mailed all managers who have asked to enter teams in the league, Tyson said, and those who have not notified him but wish to enter teams are asked to attend the meeting.

A schedule will be adopted at Monday's meeting and league rules will be drawn up, it was said.

Teams which already have entered the league are as follows:

Y's Men, Methodist Men's Bible class, Missouri Pacific Boosters, West Monroe Kiwanis club, Lions club, Grotto and Monroe Kiwanis club. Teams representing the Firemen and the Young Men's Business class of the First Baptist church also are expected to enter teams in the league.

FERRIDAY BLACK CATS PLAY AT JENA TODAY

FERRIDAY, May 21 (Special)—With a rejuvenated team including the addition of John Clayton and Eugene Schuchs, Copiah Lincoln junior college stars, home for their vacations, and aided by the addition of "Tight" Caldwell, a new hurler, and several other veterans, the Ferriday Black Cats hope to win their first game of the season Sunday afternoon when they go to Jena for a game with the Jena Giants on the Jena diamond at 4 o'clock.

Clayton, a catcher, and Schuchs, an outfielder, arrived from Wesson, Miss., where they have been attending school, on Thursday, and both will be in the lineup Sunday. Manager Freemont Scott and Field Manager Bucky King ran the team through a light workout every day this week, and the players are showing decided improvement.

SPORTS NINE DEFEATS FAIRBANKS TEAM, 11-3

Fairbanks was held to six hits, three of which were made by A. Stewart, Fairbanks outfielder. Watkins, of the Sports, also made three hits.

AMERICAN WOMEN DEFEAT BRITONS

WENTWORTH, SURREY, Eng., May 21 (AP)—Although her stars met defeat, America's strongly balanced team of women golfers today fought its way through a melange of English weather to defeat England's best, 5 1-2 to 3 1-2, in their first official team match.

The invaders made a clean sweep of three Scotch foursomes in the morning and piled up a sufficient lead to stand off a determined stand by the English women in singles in the afternoon. Victory in two of the six singles matches and a half in another established the American's team triumph.

The morning matches were played in a bright early summer sunshine, but a light rain fell through the afternoon and caused a falling off in the brilliant scoring that marked the play in the foursomes.

England's only consolation lay in the drubbing administered Mrs. Glenna Collet Vare by her old nemesis, the great Joyce Wethered. The American star, who at one time or another has beaten practically every noteworthy rival except the tall Englishwoman, was caught in a maze of bunkers and was an easy victim, 6 and 4.

Helen Hicks, America's national champion, also encountered defeat at the hands of Enid Wilson, English titleholder, 2 and 1, but not without a bitter struggle. Miss Wilson's victory came on the seventeenth green, where the American champion took three punts to get down. Both registered fine 36's for the first nine.

In the long run, the victory was decided by the fact that the supposed weak end of the American team held up better than that of the British side. Virginia Van Wie's win over Wanda Morgan, 2 to 1, and Mrs. Leona Cheney's 4 and 3 triumph over Elsie Corlett clinched the series. Mrs. Opal Hill gained a half against Molly Gourlay after a hot 18-hole fight.

Diana Fishwick, former English champion, accounted for her side's third singles victory when she defeated Maureen Orcutt, 4 and 3. The English girl played steady golf, despite an arm injury that had made it doubtful she would compete in the matches.

Cole, hurling for Fairbanks, held West Monroe to six hits. His mates made nine errors, which were largely responsible for the Independents' scoring. The score was 5 to 4 in the ninth inning when Fairbanks scored two runs and West Monroe one.

WOMEN STARS GATHER FOR HOT SPRINGS PLAY

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., May 21 (AP)—A field of some 200 women including several state and sectional titleholders will start play here Monday in the sixth trans-Mississippi golf tournament.

The fight for the championship is to be a wide open affair, since Mrs. O. S. Hill of Kansas City, the 1931 title holder is in England as a member of the United women's golf team.

Heading the list of nationally known stars here for the tournament is Mrs. Charles Dennehy of Lake Forrest, Ill., who as Miss Virginia Wilson, won the Canadian women's title in 1928, and finished as runner up in the women's western of the same year.

Waterproof has won three games in a row, beating Ferriday twice and winning from the Monroe News-Star—World Printers. Jonesville has captured two out of three games.

BALL LEADS FIELD OF 20 OPEN QUALIFYERS

ATLANTA, May 21 (AP)—Errie Ball of Atlanta, Southeastern Professional Golf association champion, heads a field of 20 players who will enter the qualifying round for the national open championship at East Lake course here June 6.

Two places are open for the golfers participating here.

Two 18-hole rounds will furnish the qualifying test.

Eddie Wiseman of the Chisago Shamrocks scored 36 points to lead the American Hockey league scorers, but his total was 11 less than that of Gordie Brydson of Chicago for the 1039-21 season.

Crouch Has Perfect Hurling Record With Three Victories, No Defeats

Dick Burrows, Pine Bluff first baseman, tops the individual hitters of the Cotton States league after the second week of play, with a mark of .410, according to official averages as released by Irwin M. Howe, of Chicago, official statistician, yesterday. Games of last Sunday are included in the averages.

Gene Walker, Port Arthur pitcher, is the leader but Walker had participated in but eight games when the figures were compiled. Walker's average is .529. Burrows is followed by Costa, Vicksburg, with .396; Sain, Baton Rouge, .391; and Sutherlin, Vicksburg, last week's leader, with .386. Shaw, of El Dorado, is tied with Sutherlin.

Monroe is third in team batting and third in team fielding, the Twin hitting average beng .275 and their fielding mark .946. Pine Bluff leads in both team batting and fielding, with an average of .302 in hitting and .965 in fielding. Vicksburg is second in both departments, with Baton Rouge, Port Arthur and El Dorado following Monroe in that order in both batting and fielding.

Homer Ezzell is leading the Twins in hitting, his mark being .349 at the end of the second week. Tom Pyle is a close second with .346, and Gray, Capps and West complete the list of .300 hitters for Monroe. Their averages are .324, .319 and .317, respectively.

However, the Twins have several leaders in other departments in the averages. Pyle led in home runs with three to his credit, while Dunbar had hit two. Pyle also was tied with Washington and Atwood, both of Baton Rouge, for total bases with 33. Capps and Dunbar were in a two-way tie for the lead in stolen bases, each having swiped six. Monroe led other teams in that respect, the team having stolen 23 bases during the first 12 games. The Twins also had worked opposing pitchers for 47 bases on balls to lead in that department. Monroe had the most assists, 155.

Bill Crouch, Monroe righthander, tied with Berry, of Pine Bluff, and Paul, of Baton Rouge, for the hurling leadership each having won three games and lost none. Dick Florrid, recent acquisition from the Wichita Falls club, was credited with one victory and no defeats for a perfect record.

Rawlins, of Pine Bluff, is first in runs, with 14, and Pyle and Persons, of Pine Bluff, are second with 13.

Following are the official averages, as of May 16:

NEWS-STAR PRINTERS TO MEET WINNFIELD

The News-Star Printers will go to Winnfield today for a game with the Winnfield Miners.

In a previous game this season, Caldwell, Winnfield hurler, held the Printers hitless and the local team is out for revenge today.

WATERPROOF WINS AGAIN.

WATERPROOF, May 21 (Special)—Wisner's newly organized baseball club was the latest victim of the Waterprof Tigers here Thursday afternoon, Manager Charlie Testa's Bengals beating the Franklin parish club 12 to 4 before a large crowd. Touching two Wisner hurlers, Broadnack, a lefthander who started, and Disch, a righthander who pitched the last three innings, for 13 hits, the Tigers took an early lead and were never headed.

TRACK STARS IN OLYMPIC TRYOUTS

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 21 (AP)—Seven track and field stars qualified today in the mid-south Olympic tryouts here at Ferguson field by equalling or bettering the standard requirements eight times.

Jack Burnett, sprinting flash from the University of Mississippi bettered both the 100 and 200-meter run qualifying time. He ran one heat of the 100-meter dash in 10.6 seconds, two-tenths of a second faster than the required time and finished the 200 meters in 21.5 or with one-tenth of a second to spare.

Curtice Rankin of Ouachita college, Arkansas, ran the first heat of the 100 meter event in 10.88 and Harold High of Southwestern of Memphis, finished with the same time in the second heat.

Steed Rountree, another Ouachita athlete, negotiated the 800 meters in one minute 55.4 seconds, six-tenths of a second faster than the standard time.

Glenn Rice, of Dumas, Ark., threw the javelin 194 feet 4 inches to beat the standard of 190 feet.

The two entries in the 400-meter low hurdles both bettered the required time of 55 seconds. Arthur Burch of Arkansas Tech took them in 53.7 seconds and Ben Hemsley, unattached runner of Memphis, in 54.1.

More University of Iowa fall and winter athletes than ever before are now sporting major "I" sweaters. Fifty-four men, in seven branches, have been honored.

A BUG

A May-bug blundered in last night, and you
Watched everywhere it went around the room;
And, when it came around the light and flew
Near you, your face was full of awful gloom;
And you put down the things with which you played,
And sidled up and stood beside my knee;
And, when it struck my desk, then you essayed
To catch the bug and hand it up to me.

Then, when it clung to your wee finger tips,
You gave a pitiful, long look to me;
And trembling fear distorted your sweet lips,
And when you tried to shake loose and be free.

THE BLUE BIRD

This gentle, beautiful and beloved bird is quite common on our cut-over pine lands, where they breed and flourish. These birds are the happy heralds of spring. The blue bird is almost the color of the sky.

The blue bird is anxious to start housekeeping and after inspecting the most attractive spots, such as a nesting box, a hollow tree or post, selects the one most befitting their needs, and starts to work building a nest without delay.

Saturday night the Barkdull Faulk P.-T. A. gave a dance and a skating contest for the opening of the tennis court. It was all lighted. The one who won the prize for the tackiest costume was Dick Eason. The one who won the prize for the prettiest costume was Dollie Smith. The first couple that danced won a prize. Billie Armstrong won the prize in the skating contest.

BEULAH STROHM.

Mr. Swayze and the citizens of the town are having the big holes filled where they dug dirt to build the levees. The river water has been in the pool and they are cleaning the pool out so it will be ready about the 15th of this month.

NELLIE SHARER.

This will introduce you to Kenneth Andrew Keller, fine young son of Mr. and Mrs. John Keller, Jr., whose home is in Henderson, Texas. He is visiting his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Keller, Sr., of this city.

OPERATION OF THE STERLINGTON POWER PLANT

This plant is run by gas and water. The gas being used for fuel to change the water into steam. The steam then goes through two super heaters. It then passes into a turbine where it is used to turn a generator which generates the electricity, from the turbine it passes to the condenser where it is converted back to water again. Leaving the condensor it goes to the boiler feed tank. The boilers have regulators on them that work by themselves. The water goes through the same process many times.

THE RED-HEADED WOODPECKER

In early spring we see the red-head swinging from tree to tree in the forest or orchard. We can always tell him by his bright hood which covers his whole head, and by his rattling note.

What would the trees do if their friend, the woodpecker, would not kill the beetles and bugs?

He makes his home in northern United States in summer, though he likes the southern part in winter.

OLD WOMAN, OLD WOMAN

There was an old woman tossed in a basket,
Seventeen times as high as the moon;
But where she was going no mortal could tell,
For under her arm she carried a broom.

"Old woman, old woman, old woman," said I,
"Whither, whither, oh whither so high?"
"To sweep the cobwebs from the sky;
And I'll be with you by and by."

PEACOCK

The peacocks roost in trees, and eat worms, insects, small snakes, and display the well known beauty of seeds. At the pairing season, males their tail. The usual cry is a shrill "P-a-o!" Noises are made by rattling their quills. Their eggs are a brownish color, and are numerous, from eight to ten. They are laid without a nest, in some concealed spot.

The peacock excells all other birds in the beauty of its plumage, the colors of whic hare usually both gorgeous and varied. Some of them are pure white. They are very rarely seen in the United States.

GOD, be kind to mothers
With cookie jars to fill,
And funny lullabies to sing
When dusk blows down the hill.
Who scrub small children's faces,

My mamma's makin' dumpunums an' makin' chicken gravy,
An' I'm dressed up an' swingin' on the gate to watch for dad,
My mamma's makin' dumpunums an' makin' chicken gravy,
She makes the best dumpunums you almos' never had;
An' I dot ribbons in my hair, an' I'm out here a-swingin',
I'm on the gate an' swingin' an' a-watchin' for my dad;

An' I'll tell him 'bout the dumpunums an' my! but he'll be glad.

My mamma's makin' dumpunums—I'm des come from the kitchen,
And me dropped the flour sifter and me spilled some water, too,
And my mamma said: "Miss Twoshoes, someone's goin' to get a switchin'
If they don't go watch for daddy, and I'm afraid it might be you!"
So I'm watchin' for my daddy, now, up on the gate a-swingin'
An' me'll see him way off yonder when he comes into the street,
An' me'll dance away to meet him, des a'laughin' an' a singin'
An' me'll tell him about the dumpunums an' dad'll call me sweet.

Dad'll stoop right down to grab me when he sees me come a-runnin'
An' he'll kiss me and he'll ask me: "Who is daddy's little dirl?"
An' he'll pick me up and toss me an' he'll say: "Now tell me cunnin',
Who tied that little baby ribbon on that little yellow curl?"
'N'en he'd put me on him's shoulder and we'll go back home a-talkin',
An' he'll love me and he'll hug me and he'll tell me me am sweet,
An' the mockin' birds up yonder will be singin' an' a-mockin'
An' me'll tell him 'bout the dumpunums that we will have to eat.

OPERETTA

The Barkdull Faulk school is practicing for an operetta. The name of the operetta is "Twilight Alley." It is said to be the best operetta for children than ever before made. It is going to be in the last part of May for the graduates of the Barkdull Faulk school. The boys have songs. One is called "Play Ball." They have many others, too. The girls' song is "Cleaning and Sweeping," and they have many others also.

THE OPEN BURNER PROCESS OF CARBON MANUFACTURING

The open burner process of carbon making is much like an oil lamp. There are many tin houses which are air tight. Gas is piped through the houses where it burns without air. As it burns carbon collects on all sides. Negroes are hired to scrape the carbon out and put it in boxes and ship it away Then the same process goes over and over.

NATIONAL MUSIC WEEK

Last week the Barkdull Faulk school celebrated National Music week. The lower grades sang first. Then the higher grades sang. There were three ladies who were to be judges. Two of the voters voted for the lower grades. One voted for the higher grades. The little children won.

Friday morning some of the children went to the Neville high. The higher grades beat the little children. The little children got out at 2 o'clock. The big children got out at 2:15.

FLORENCE F. FLUKER,

The Barkdull Faulk school was feeding some children, but has run out of money and hasn't enough money to buy milk, so they had to quit feeding them.

The P.-T. A. is giving little social meetings and is trying to raise money. The children are trying to help, too.

THE MOCKING BIRD

In early spring you can hear the mocking bird singing early in the morning. He is harmless and is one of the friendliest birds in the world. He eats worms, crumbs, bugs, and fruits. His head and back are light brown and he has a whitish breast.

He has white and brown speckled eggs, and he raises about four little birds. He works very hard for his living.

JOHNYE AGNES HORTON,
A. L. Smith School, Grade Five,
Sterlington, La.

THE KINGFISHER

This beautiful and gentle little bird makes its nest in the ground. They sometimes have speckled brown, red and white eggs. You must not touch the eggs, for the bird will not come back, and hatch any more little birds.

They try to make their nest way off where no one may find it, and harm the eggs. When the little birds are hatched, and are able to eat, the mother goes, and gets some food for the little ones.

CARBON BLACK MANUFACTURED BY THE THERMATOMIC PROCESS

Thermatomic carbon is manufactured from natural gas, by a patented heat process, in furnaces lined with bricks. The natural gas is allowed to enter the furnaces as fuel heating the bricks to a high temperature. The fire is then turned out and the gas allowed to enter the heated furnace in the absence of air, which causes the carbon to pop from the gas, just as popcorn is popped, hydrogen is liberated as a by-product. Then the carbon is run through a cooler until it is cooled, then collected, when it is conveyed to the sifter room, where it is sifted in order to get the lumps out of the carbon. Later it is put into bags from the sifter, weighed, packed and stored in the warehouse awaiting shipment. Carbon is used in the manufacturing of many things, such as auto tires, paints, inks, etc.

THE VALUE OF A LIBRARY

The library is a great help, especially to children in school. It also helps in the home. If you have a library in your home you can learn many interesting things, and also learn to read better. All schools should have a library in them because it helps to educate the children. Anybody should never read anything but good books, because they don't help you any. It only wastes your time.

RUTH DEALE,
6th Grade, A. L. Smith School.

INDIANS

Some Indians came to our school. There were five of them. They danced a war dance. The oldest one was the chief. He played the drum. The two youngest ones were the chief's sons. They had on beautiful clothes and slippers. They talked English. There was a play at the Neville high Saturday morning. It cost 10c for children and 25c for grown people. It surely was good.

MARJORIE HART,
Barkdull Faulk school, 6-B grade.

NATIONAL MUSIC WEEK

All the schools celebrated National Music week, which was last week. The Barkdull Faulk school had a big P.-T. A. meeting and had a singing contest between the smaller and the larger children. The large children were beaten because they made some mistakes in pronouncing their words. Friday morning a number of children went to Neville high. Every school had a part in the program there. The large children in the Barkdull Faulk school won at Neville high.

JOSEPHINE McCOOK,
Barkdull Faulk school, grade 6-B.

LIBRARY WORK

Library work is a very important thing. It teaches the children to read faster, want to read more, and learn many new words. In our school we have over one hundred volumes suitable for report. The way to draw a book is to sign a card, when ten days are over or pay two cents for keeping it overtime. If you are not through with the book you may renew it and keep it ten more days.

BLUE AND RED MACAW

The macaw is a lover of the hot climate. Maybe he doesn't like the cold climate. Maybe he doesn't like the food. Maybe he doesn't like the thin forest.

The macaw is a cousin of the parrot. He is like the parrot in the way of talking.

The macaws are very few in this country. You may have seen a macaw in the zoos. Men have hunted this beautiful bird so much that there are very few. The macaw sleeps by day and hunts by night.

THE INDIANS

About a week ago three Indians came to our school. They sang Indian songs. They also played a tom-tom and danced a war dance. They showed us how to talk on your hands.

PROOF

After the composition has been completed, or after a galley has been filled, the type is held in place by a slug at the foot and by reglets, narrow strips of wood furniture, or furniture locked in at the sides, while the type is inked and a proof or print is taken on a sheet of thin soft paper. Or, if the type being set is for job work, or if it makes less than a galley, the form is tied up by passing a string several times around the form and in such a manner as to hold the type together firmly, after which a proof is made. This may be made with a planer and mallet or on a proof press.

A BUG

A May-bug blundered in last night, and you
Watched everywhere it went around the room;
And, when it came around the light and flew
Near you, your face was full of awful gloom;
And you put down the things with which you played,
And sidled up and stood beside my knee;
And, when it struck my desk, then you essayed
To catch the bug and hand it up to me.

Then, when it clung to your wee finger tips,
You gave a pitiful, long look to me;
And trembling fear distorted your sweet lips,
And when you tried to shake loose and be free.

THE BLUE BIRD

This gentle, beautiful and beloved bird is quite common on our cut-over pine lands, where they breed and flourish. These birds are the happy heralds of spring. The blue bird is almost the color of the sky.

The blue bird is anxious to start housekeeping and after inspecting the most attractive spots, such as a nesting box, a hollow tree or post, selects the one most befitting their needs, and starts to work building a nest without delay.

NATIONAL MUSIC WEEK

Last week the Barkdull Faulk school celebrated National Music week. The lower grades sang first. Then the higher grades sang. There were three ladies who were to be judges. Two of the voters voted for the lower grades. One voted for the higher grades. The little children won.

Friday morning some of the children went to the Neville high. The higher grades beat the little children. The little children got out at 2 o'clock. The big children got out at 2:15.

FLORENCE F. FLUKER,
Barkdull Faulk school, grade 6-B.

The Barkdull Faulk school was feeding some children, but has run out of money and hasn't enough money to buy milk, so they had to quit feeding them.

The P.-T. A. is giving little social meetings and is trying to raise money. The children are trying to help, too.

THE MOCKING BIRD

In early spring you can hear the mocking bird singing early in the morning. He is harmless and is one of the friendliest birds in the world. He eats worms, crumbs, bugs, and fruits. His head and back are light brown and he has a whitish breast.

He has white and brown speckled eggs, and he raises about four little birds. He works very hard for his living.

JOHNYE AGNES HORTON,
A. L. Smith School, Grade Five,
Sterlington, La.

THE KINGFISHER

This beautiful and gentle little bird makes its nest in the ground. They sometimes have speckled brown, red and white eggs. You must not touch the eggs, for the bird will not come back, and hatch any more little birds.

They try to make their nest way off where no one may find it, and harm the eggs. When the little birds are hatched, and are able to eat, the mother goes, and gets some food for the little ones.

CARBON BLACK MANUFACTURED BY THE THERMATOMIC PROCESS

Thermatomic carbon is manufactured from natural gas, by a patented heat process, in furnaces lined with bricks. The natural gas is allowed to enter the furnaces as fuel heating the bricks to a high temperature. The fire is then turned out and the gas allowed to enter the heated furnace in the absence of air, which causes the carbon to pop from the gas, just as popcorn is popped, hydrogen is liberated as a by-product. Then the carbon is run through a cooler until it is cooled, then collected, when it is conveyed to the sifter room, where it is sifted in order to get the lumps out of the carbon. Later it is put into bags from the sifter, weighed, packed and stored in the warehouse awaiting shipment. Carbon is used in the manufacturing of many things, such as auto tires, paints, inks, etc.

We would like to introduce you to Joyce Jo Cerniglia, beautiful little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cerniglia, 305 Rochelle avenue. This young lady has the distinction of enjoying her fifth anniversary flying over Monroe in an airplane.

THE VALUE OF A LIBRARY

The library is a great help, especially to children in school. It also helps in the home. If you have a library in your home you can learn many interesting things, and also learn to read better. All schools should have a library in them because it helps to educate the children. Anybody should never read anything but good books, because they don't help you any. It only wastes your time.

RUTH DEALE,
6th Grade, A. L. Smith School.

INDIANS

Some Indians came to our school. There were five of them. They danced a war dance. The oldest one was the chief. He played the drum. The two youngest ones were the chief's sons. They had on beautiful clothes and slippers. They talked English. There was a play at the Neville high Saturday morning. It cost 10c for children and 25c for grown people. It surely was good.

MARJORIE HART,
Barkdull Faulk school, 6-B grade.

NATIONAL MUSIC WEEK

All the schools celebrated National Music week, which was last week. The Barkdull Faulk school had a big P.-T. A. meeting and had a singing contest between the smaller and the larger children. The large children were beaten because they made some mistakes in pronouncing their words. Friday morning a number of children went to Neville high. Every school had a part in the program there. The large children in the Barkdull Faulk school won at Neville high.

JOSEPHINE McCOOK,
Barkdull Faulk school, grade 6-B.

LIBRARY WORK

Library work is a very important thing. It teaches the children to read faster, want to read more, and learn many new words. In our school we have over one hundred volumes suitable for report. The way to draw a book is to sign a card, when ten days are over or pay two cents for keeping it overtime. If you are not through with the book you may renew it and keep it ten more days.

BLUE AND RED MACAW

The macaw is a lover of the hot climate. Maybe he doesn't like the cold climate. Maybe he doesn't like the food. Maybe he doesn't like the thin forest.

The macaw is a cousin of the parrot. He is like the parrot in the way of talking.

The macaws are very few in this country. You may have seen a macaw in the zoos. Men have hunted this beautiful bird so much that there are very few. The macaw sleeps by day and hunts by night.

BUFORD GOSS,
5th Grade, A. L. Smith School,

THE INDIANS

About a week ago three Indians came to our school. They sang Indian songs. They also played a tom-tom and danced a war dance. They showed us how to talk on your hands.

PROOF

After the composition has been completed, or after a galley has been filled, the type is held in place by a slug at the foot and by reglets, narrow strips of wood furniture, or furniture locked in at the sides, while the type is inked and a proof or print is taken on a sheet of thin soft paper. Or, if the type being set is for job work, or if it makes less than a galley, the form is tied up by passing a string several times around the form and in such a manner as to hold the type together firmly, after which a proof is made. This may be made with a planer and mallet or on a proof press.

STOCK MARKET HAS UNUSUAL QUIET DAY, EVEN AT WEEKEND

Dullest Saturday Session Since August 8 of Last Year; Final Variations Are So Narrow That for Second Successive Day of Trade Standard Statistics-Associated Press Composite Closes Altogether Unchanged.

By John L. Cooley
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—Stocks ambled today through the quietest Saturday market since August 8 of last year.

On dealings of only 302,540 shares final variations were so narrow that for the second successive session the Standard Statistics-Associated Press composite closed unchanged. Quotations reacted moderately in the first hour, but slow recoveries during the second evened accounts.

U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Electric, DuPont, Case, Union Pacific and Eastman averaged half a point higher, offsetting losses of similar proportions for Westinghouse, Allied Chemical, Standard of New Jersey and American Tobacco "B." American Telephone threw off early heaviness and closed with a gain. Several inactives dipped sharply on small sales. United Cigar Stores preferred dropped 7 7-8, American Sugar preferred lost 8 in the first transaction this week and Electric Power and Light $6 preferred tumbled 3 3-4 to 16.

Trade news at the weekend was encouraging in that activity in leading lines seemed to be about holding its own. Youngstown district steel operations are to be a shade higher beginning Monday and manufacturers are understood to be looking for some further gain in automobile buying. Also, prices so far have held up against the 15 per cent wage reduction, although consumption volume has perhaps been too light to test them thoroughly.

Lower gasoline prices in the New York metropolitan district were viewed as a local condition rather than as a forerunner of weakness through the general structure of oil quotations.

There was some further loss of gold, but weakness of Dutch guilders suggested the movement to that country might be coming to an end. Europe has already drawn down her balances here very substantially and bankers feel that exports from now on should be smaller since it is necessary for foreign nations to maintain some funds here for commercial purposes.

By Victor Eubank
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—A rally in United States government bonds today had a steadying effect on the bond market.

While corporate issues did little better than hold their own on the average, the majority did not, at least, extend their losses. The greatest volume of trading was in the federal department. Sales totaled $6,180,000, par value for the entire market.

Although the railway average showed a modest recovery, the carriers exhibited no exceptional buoyancy. Included among the mild gainers were Santa Fe General 4's, Baltimore & Ohio First 4's, Canadian Pacific 5's, St. Paul 5's, Rock Island 4's and 4 1-2's, Erie Convertible 4's and Consolidated 4's, Hudson & Manhattan Refunding 5's, Illinois Central 4 3-4's, Kansas City Southern Refunding 5's, two of the Missouri Pacific 5's, Pennsylvania Debenture 4 1-2's, Frisco 4 1-2's, Southern Pacific 4 1-2's, and Texas Pacific 5's.

The utilities and industrials were practically unchanged. Power and Light company liens were easy. There were a few outstanding slumps. Lehigh Valley Coal 5's lost 37 3-4 points and Kresge Foundation 6's dropped 25 5-8 points on the sale of only two bonds in each instance. Loews 6's rallied moderately, but most amusement company loans were soft. The oils generally improved.

German government 7's drifted to a new low, but the Reich's 5 1-2's came back for a fractional gain. French and British loans were steady. Japanese bonds declined.

Chicago Cotton

CHICAGO, May 21 (AP)—The cotton market closed irregular, 4 points net higher, to four points net lower; Liverpool was closed today. American futures markets opened generally slightly lower, first prices at Chicago being 2 points up to 4 points down. Further losses were made in early trading, but Chicago advanced after the close of the outside markets. Rain fell at Charleston, S. C., and one inch at Chattanooga. Most of the area east of the Mississippi received light precipitation and further showers are forecast. Exports continue to run large, but demand for spots is said to be slow at some southern markets.

GRAIN

Chicago Grain

CHICAGO, May 21.—(AP)—Influenced by relative easiness of the New York stock market and by unexpected downturns in Liverpool wheat quotations, grain prices here sagged early today. Opening unchanged to 3-8 lower, wheat afterward receded all around. Corn started at a shade to 1-4 decline and subsequently held near the initial limits.

Wheat closed strong 5-8 to 1 1-8 above yesterday's finish, corn 1-8 to 3-8 up, oats varying from 1-2 decline to 1-8 advance, and provisions unchanged to 10 higher.

COTTON ERRATIC AT NEW ORLEANS

Market Moderately Active for Weekend Day

LIVERPOOL IS CLOSED

Some Net Declines Are Shown at Closing

NEW ORLEANS, May 21 (AP)—The cotton market was moderately active for a short weekend session, but prices were somewhat erratic with a slight downward trend. Liverpool was closed and the market here after opening 3 points down, continued to ease off owing to some weeekend liquidation and rather favorable weather in the belt, finally showing losses of 7 points from the previous close. There was a rally tf 5 points in the second hour but May eased off 4 points near the end on liquidation owing to the approach of the final day. The close was steady showing net declines for the day of 8 points on May and 2 to 5 points on later months.

The opening was easier, and because of favorable weather in the belt and prospect for continued good weather over the weekend July traded down to 5.73 and October to 5.92, down 7 points from the previous close.

The market rallied somewhat near the end and on shorts covering for over the weekend, July advancing to 5.78 and October to 5.97, up 5 points from the earlier lows. May ased off 4 points near the end on some liquidation owing to the nearness of the last day of trading in that position. The other months lost only one point from th top. May closed at 5.65, down 8 points net for the day, while July and October lost only 3 points net for the day.

Port receipts 5627; for season 9,613,043; last season 8,798,193. Exports 13,272; for season 7,678,089; last season 6,082,210. Port stocks 3,920,362; last year 3,360,348. Combined shipboard stock at New Orleans Galveston and Houston 80,037. Last year 68,564. Spot sales at southern markets 4522; last year 3983.

NEW YORK COTTON SHOWS SOME LOSS

OPENS STEADY, OFF 1-2

Net Drops of 3 to 5 Points Shown at End

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—A moderate decline in cotton today was attributed to a little southern selling and realizing or liquidation promoted by favorable weather reports from the south and absence of aggressive support. The opening was steady at a decline of 1 to 2 points.

Offerings were absorbed by trade buying at the decline, and after selling off to 5.71 for July prices rallied slightly on reports of a steadier turn in the stock market. July closed at 5.75 with the general market closing steady at net declines of 3 to 5 points.

Except for the favorable weather news which indicated further rains or showers in the eastern belt with clear weather in the west, and somewhat higher temperatures, no particular news factor was emphasized in connection with the decline. The failure of Washington advices to show more rapid progress in balancing the budget, however, was referred to as a disappointing feature which may possibly have increased a disposition to liquidate small long accounts.

CREDIT SECRETARY WILL ADDRESS LOCAL MEETING

Earl Wright, field secretary of the National Retail Credit association, is to visit this city and will address a meeting of business and professional men Wednesday noon at Hotel Virginia, it was stated by H. B. Ryland, manager of the Credit Men's association, yesterday.

Mr. Wright is a resident of Ionia, Mich., and his territory includes the states of Ohio, West Virginia, Maryland, Virginia and a part of Pennsylvania. He is a printer by trade and rose in the ranks to become manager of a daily in Ionia and later secretary of the chamber of commerce in that city.

LAND FOR FLOOD CONTROL IS GIVEN IN WEST MONROE

All land required for flood control protection in West Monroe will be available free of cost, it was stated yesterday. E. O. Smith, resident of that city, has offered 600 feet of river frontage without charge and it is expected that her land required will be similarly donated.

It is estimated that the flood protection proposed for West Monroe will increase land values by no less than 25 per cent.

STUDENT HONORED

Gems of Peril

CHAPTER XXIX

Mary tried to speak from a dry throat but could not. She merely nodded. She must get hold of herself, she thought wildly, or she would gave the whole thing away. What was it George Bowen had said? "Now's your big moment, Gloria Swanson, do your stuff!" She relaxed, smiling a little.

De Loma drew up a chair at the Countess' urgent invitation. He said reprovingly, "All that is past, Louise. There are no titles in America, remember." Was there a warning in his tone? Mary could have sworn his words were more significant than they appeared.

"Nonsense," the Countess laughed. "There are more here than in Europe nowadays!"

Mr. Jupiter ate his dinner, paying no attention to the conversation. Thank God, thought Mary, he doesn't suspect. Now if I can only be sure of myself. . . .

But De Loma was not looking at her. After the first swift glance—did she imagine it or had his eyes strayed to her throat, involuntarily seeking the necklace?—he gave his attention to the Countess, chatting with her in a manner at once reserved and intimate. Mary looked at Bruce to see how he was taking it. He was calm enough. No trace of jealousy there, at least, apparent to the eye.

The music started, and with one accord the two stood up and danced away, almost forgetting to excuse themselves in their absorption. The Countess was anxious to get De Loma away, or so it seemed. Bruce immediately turned to Mary and they followed the others to the dance floor.

Mary's thoughts were racing. Once she thought of throwing the whole thing on Bruce's shoulders. . . . "There is the man who killed your mother!" Bruce would be equal to the emergency; he would know what to do. And she could run away and hide, where this trembling of the knees would not threaten to conquer her at any minute! If Bruce had been a trifle more approachable she might actually have done it. But this frozen calm of his was more than she could break through.

There was no doubt in her mind that it was the same man she had seen at Shay's. She would know him anywhere. The same smooth, sallow skin, the same jet black hair, the bold, black eyes, so curiously unwinking. It was disconcerting to meet his stare—there was something rapacious, inhuman about it.

And this other puzzle, of his acquaintance with the Countess. Where had those two known each other? The Countess was making her first visit to America, ostensibly, and Mary knew definitely that America had been the scene of operations of The Fly for several years past, at least! Was the Countess another whom he had taken in at some time or other? Or was she, as the astute Bates asserted, a criminal herself?

Mary resolutely put these thoughts aside lest they show in her face as she and Bruce returned to the table. The Countess had lost her strained look and was gay, even coquettish, again.

* * *

Mary stabbed at the frozen fruits in her ice unseeingly. She was so absorbed that it disconcerted her when she glanced up and saw her table companions all looking at her. She looked around at them rather wildly, frightened at having been caught off guard.

"What is it?" she asked.

The Countess lowered her eyes. "Enrique was merely saying that you look exquisite," she murmured throatily. "Not at all the jeune fille. It is perhaps the dress? Remarkable, the flair for dress the young American working woman possesses. By day, the grub, slaving away at the typewriting machine . . . at night, voila! She is a butterfly, dressed like a queen! Amazing!"

The scratch was in that, as usual, but Mary was saved from replying when De Loma, suddenly leaning forward on his arms, asked bluntly: "Haven't we met before?"

It was a challenge, but its swiftness found Mary ready to meet it.

"You were at Shay's, weren't you?" She laughed, as at an irresistible memory. "If I'd known then—"

"Known? Known what?"

"Why, that you were a count, of course"—She held her lower lip with her teeth, as if to control her amusement. "We thought you were a—you know—a racketeer! We practically ran from the place. Didn't you notice it?"

The beady black eyes did not change expression. As they bored into hers, seeming to probe her very soul for guile, Mary met them steadily, unwaveringly. (If he were scared off now . . . if he didn't believe her for a moment of terrible suspense.)

The innocent confusion that showed in her face apparently satisfied him, for he broke into a grin and turned to the Countess to speak of something else. The music began again, a dreamy tango this time, and to Mary's surprise De Loma abruptly turned back to her again and asked her to dance.

Her heart plunged once, then began to thump madly. She felt quite cold and numb, but somehow she got to her feet, lifted her arms to him. Then, incredibly, she was moving off with him, his arm about her, her hand in his. It was . . . horrible. She, Mary Harkness, in the arms of this murderer, this thief! For one awful instant she felt her knees give way under her. Then she was dancing, she felt the beat of the music, she wrenched her mind away from the man beside her. Gradually the black, dizzy whirlpool before her eyes cleared.

He danced beautifully . . . better than any man she had ever danced with. There was something sinuously graceful about his, a lithe sureness that must be his Latin heritage. She had never danced so well in her life, that was certain.

SPENDS WEEKEND AT HOME

Mrs. Jewell McQuiller, home demonstration agent, went to Homer yesterday to spend the weekend. Her assistant, Miss Myrtle Carver, accompanied her as far as Ruston.

NEGROES TO CELEBRATE

Several carloads of local negroes will leave this morning to attend the anniversary celebration, from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Piney Grove Baptist church.

STOCK MARKET HAS UNUSUAL QUIET DAY, EVEN AT WEEKEND

Dullest Saturday Session Since August 8 of Last Year; Final Variations Are So Narrow That for Second Successive Day of Trade Standard Statistics-Associated Press Composite Closes Altogether Unchanged.

By John L. Cooley
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—Stocks ambled today through the quietest Saturday market since August 8 of last year.

On dealings of only 302,540 shares final variations were so narrow that for the second successive session the Standard Statistics-Associated Press composite closed unchanged. Quotations reacted moderately in the first hour, but slow recoveries during the second evened accounts.

U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Electric, DuPont, Case, Union Pacific and Eastman averaged half a point higher, offsetting losses of similar proportions for Westinghouse, Allied Chemical, Standard of New Jersey and American Tobacco "B." American Telephone threw off early heaviness and closed with a gain. Several inactives dipped sharply on small sales. United Cigar Stores preferred dropped 7 7-8, American Sugar preferred lost 8 in the first transaction this week and Electric Power and Light $6 preferred tumbled 3 3-4 to 16.

Trade news at the weekend was encouraging in that activity in leading lines seemed to be about holding its own. Youngstown district steel operations are to be a shade higher beginning Monday and manufacturers are understood to be looking for some further gain in automobile buying. Also, prices so far have held up against the 15 per cent wage reduction, although consumption volume has perhaps been too light to test them thoroughly.

Lower gasoline prices in the New York metropolitan district were viewed as a local condition rather than as a forerunner of weakness through the general structure of oil quotations.

There was some further loss of gold, but weakness of Dutch guilders suggested the movement to that country might be coming to an end. Europe has already drawn down her balances here very substantially and bankers feel that exports from now on should be smaller since it is necessary for foreign nations to maintain some funds here for commercial purposes.

By Victor Eubank
(Associated Press Financial Writer)

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—A rally in United States government bonds today had a steadying effect on the bond market.

While corporate issues did little better than hold their own on the average, the majority did not, at least, extend their losses. The greatest volume of trading was in the federal department. Sales totaled $6,180,000, par value for the entire market.

Although the railway average showed a modest recovery, the carriers exhibited no exceptional buoyancy. Included among the mild gainers were Santa Fe General 4's, Baltimore & Ohio First 4's, Canadian Pacific 5's, St. Paul 5's, Rock Island 4's and 4 1-2's, Erie Convertible 4's and Consolidated 4's, Hudson & Manhattan Refunding 5's, Illinois Central 4 3-4's, Kansas City Southern Refunding 5's, two of the Missouri Pacific 5's, Pennsylvania Debenture 4 1-2's, Frisco 4 1-2's, Southern Pacific 4 1-2's, and Texas Pacific 5's.

The utilities and industrials were practically unchanged. Power and Light company liens were easy. There were a few outstanding slumps. Lehigh Valley Coal 5's lost 37 3-4 points and Kresge Foundation 6's dropped 25 5-8 points on the sale of only two bonds in each instance. Loews 6's rallied moderately, but most amusement company loans were soft. The oils generally improved.

German government 7's drifted to a new low, but the Reich's 5 1-2's came back for a fractional gain. French and British loans were steady. Japanese bonds declined.

GRAIN

Chicago Grain

CHICAGO, May 21.—(AP)—Influenced by relative easiness of the New York stock market and by unexpected downturns in Liverpool wheat quotations, grain prices here sagged early today. Opening unchanged to 3-8 lower, wheat afterward receded all around. Corn started at a shade to 1-4 decline and subsequently held near the initial limits.

Wheat closed strong 5-8 to 1 1-8 above yesterday's finish, corn 1-8 to 3-8 up, oats varying from 1-2 decline to 1-8 advance, and provisions unchanged to 10 higher.

COTTON ERRATIC AT NEW ORLEANS

Some Net Declines Are Shown at Closing

NEW ORLEANS, May 21 (AP)—The cotton market was moderately active for a short weekend session, but prices were somewhat erratic with a slight downward trend. Liverpool was closed and the market here after opening 3 points down, continued to ease off owing to some weeekend liquidation and rather favorable weather in the belt, finally showing losses of 7 points from the previous close. There was a rally tf 5 points in the second hour but May eased off 4 points near the end on liquidation owing to the approach of the final day. The close was steady showing net declines for the day of 8 points on May and 2 to 5 points on later months.

The opening was easier, and because of favorable weather in the belt and prospect for continued good weather over the weekend July traded down to 5.73 and October to 5.92, down 7 points from the previous close.

The market rallied somewhat near the end and on shorts covering for over the weekend, July advancing to 5.78 and October to 5.97, up 5 points from the earlier lows. May ased off 4 points near the end on some liquidation owing to the nearness of the last day of trading in that position. The other months lost only one point from th top. May closed at 5.65, down 8 points net for the day, while July and October lost only 3 points net for the day.

NEW YORK COTTON SHOWS SOME LOSS

OPENS STEADY, OFF 1-2

NEW YORK, May 21 (AP)—A moderate decline in cotton today was attributed to a little southern selling and realizing or liquidation promoted by favorable weather reports from the south and absence of aggressive support. The opening was steady at a decline of 1 to 2 points.

Offerings were absorbed by trade buying at the decline, and after selling off to 5.71 for July prices rallied slightly on reports of a steadier turn in the stock market. July closed at 5.75 with the general market closing steady at net declines of 3 to 5 points.

Except for the favorable weather news which indicated further rains or showers in the eastern belt with clear weather in the west, and somewhat higher temperatures, no particular news factor was emphasized in connection with the decline. The failure of Washington advices to show more rapid progress in balancing the budget, however, was referred to as a disappointing feature which may possibly have increased a disposition to liquidate small long accounts.

PRODUCE

Louisiana Produce

NEW ORLEANS, May 21.—(AP)—(USDA)—First arrivals of California apricots and plums were reported and grapes were coming from Chile. California apricots brought 3.40 and Apex plums sold 3.25-3.50 per box. Twenty pound boxes of Chile Almeria grapes brought 3.50. California cantaloupes brought lower prices and crates of 45 melons sold 3.25-4.50. Apples ranged 1.50-2.50 per box, depending on grade and variety. Louisiana strawberries were steady at 75-1.00 per 24-pint crate. Best Florida oranges sold 3.50-4.25 and grapefruit ranged 3.25-3.50 per box.

Louisiana Bliss Triumph potatoes sold 1.50-2.00 and Burbanks brought 1.75-1.85 per 100-pound sack. Maine potatoes sold at 1.40-1.50 per cwt. Creole onions were quoted 1.50-2.00 and sweet potatoes 75-1.00 per cwt. Garlic brought 25-75 per double string. Cabbage sold 75-1.00 per dozen heads.

Cucumbers were quoted 1.25-1.75 per bushel; snap beans 25-50; peas 1.50-1.75; squash and Texas corn held firm at 3.75. Beets sold 15-25 per dozen bunches; carrots 20-25; mustard 25-35, and turnips 25-30.

Iceberg lettuce sold mostly 3.25 per crate of 5 dozen heads. Cauliflower ranged 1.85-2.25 per crate. Tomatoes sold 1.75-2.75 per lug box.

CREDIT SECRETARY WILL ADDRESS LOCAL MEETING

Earl Wright, field secretary of the National Retail Credit association, is to visit this city and will address a meeting of business and professional men Wednesday noon at Hotel Virginia, it was stated by H. B. Ryland, manager of the Credit Men's association, yesterday.

Mr. Wright is a resident of Ionia, Mich., and his territory includes the states of Ohio, West Virginia, Maryland, Virginia and a part of Pennsylvania. He is a printer by trade and rose in the ranks to become manager of a daily in Ionia and later secretary of the chamber of commerce in that city.

LAND FOR FLOOD CONTROL IS GIVEN IN WEST MONROE

All land required for flood control protection in West Monroe will be available free of cost, it was stated yesterday. E. O. Smith, resident of that city, has offered 600 feet of river frontage without charge and it is expected that her land required will be similarly donated.

It is estimated that the flood protection proposed for West Monroe will increase land values by no less than 25 per cent.

STUDENT HONORED

CHAPTER XXIX

Mary tried to speak from a dry throat but could not. She merely nodded. She must get hold of herself, she thought wildly, or she would gave the whole thing away. What was it George Bowen had said? "Now's your big moment, Gloria Swanson, do your stuff!" She relaxed, smiling a little.

De Loma drew up a chair at the Countess' urgent invitation. He said reprovingly, "All that is past, Louise. There are no titles in America, remember." Was there a warning in his tone? Mary could have sworn his words were more significant than they appeared.

"Nonsense," the Countess laughed. "There are more here than in Europe nowadays!"

Mr. Jupiter ate his dinner, paying no attention to the conversation. Thank God, thought Mary, he doesn't suspect. Now if I can only be sure of myself. . . .

But De Loma was not looking at her. After the first swift glance—did she imagine it or had his eyes strayed to her throat, involuntarily seeking the necklace?—he gave his attention to the Countess, chatting with her in a manner at once reserved and intimate. Mary looked at Bruce to see how he was taking it. He was calm enough. No trace of jealousy there, at least, apparent to the eye.

The music started, and with one accord the two stood up and danced away, almost forgetting to excuse themselves in their absorption. The Countess was anxious to get De Loma away, or so it seemed. Bruce immediately turned to Mary and they followed the others to the dance floor.

Mary's thoughts were racing. Once she thought of throwing the whole thing on Bruce's shoulders. . . . "There is the man who killed your mother!" Bruce would be equal to the emergency; he would know what to do. And she could run away and hide, where this trembling of the knees would not threaten to conquer her at any minute! If Bruce had been a trifle more approachable she might actually have done it. But this frozen calm of his was more than she could break through.

There was no doubt in her mind that it was the same man she had seen at Shay's. She would know him anywhere. The same smooth, sallow skin, the same jet black hair, the bold, black eyes, so curiously unwinking. It was disconcerting to meet his stare—there was something rapacious, inhuman about it.

And this other puzzle, of his acquaintance with the Countess. Where had those two known each other? The Countess was making her first visit to America, ostensibly, and Mary knew definitely that America had been the scene of operations of The Fly for several years past, at least! Was the Countess another whom he had taken in at some time or other? Or was she, as the astute Bates asserted, a criminal herself?

Mary resolutely put these thoughts aside lest they show in her face as she and Bruce returned to the table. The Countess had lost her strained look and was gay, even coquettish, again.

* * *

Mary stabbed at the frozen fruits in her ice unseeingly. She was so absorbed that it disconcerted her when she glanced up and saw her table companions all looking at her. She looked around at them rather wildly, frightened at having been caught off guard.

"What is it?" she asked.

The Countess lowered her eyes. "Enrique was merely saying that you look exquisite," she murmured throatily. "Not at all the jeune fille. It is perhaps the dress? Remarkable, the flair for dress the young American working woman possesses. By day, the grub, slaving away at the typewriting machine . . . at night, voila! She is a butterfly, dressed like a queen! Amazing!"

The scratch was in that, as usual, but Mary was saved from replying when De Loma, suddenly leaning forward on his arms, asked bluntly: "Haven't we met before?"

It was a challenge, but its swiftness found Mary ready to meet it. "You were at Shay's, weren't you?" She laughed, as at an irresistible memory. "If I'd known then—"

"Known? Known what?"

"Why, that you were a count, of course"—She held her lower lip with her teeth, as if to control her amusement. "We thought you were a—you know—a racketeer! We practically ran from the place. Didn't you notice it?"

The beady black eyes did not change expression. As they bored into hers, seeming to probe her very soul for guile, Mary met them steadily, unwaveringly. (If he were scared off now . . . if he didn't believe her for a moment of terrible suspense.)

The innocent confusion that showed in her face apparently satisfied him, for he broke into a grin and turned to the Countess to speak of something else. The music began again, a dreamy tango this time, and to Mary's surprise De Loma abruptly turned back to her again and asked her to dance.

Her heart plunged once, then began to thump madly. She felt quite cold and numb, but somehow she got to her feet, lifted her arms to him. Then, incredibly, she was moving off with him, his arm about her, her hand in his. It was . . . horrible. She, Mary Harkness, in the arms of this murderer, this thief! For one awful instant she felt her knees give way under her. Then she was dancing, she felt the beat of the music, she wrenched her mind away from the man beside her. Gradually the black, dizzy whirlpool before her eyes cleared.

He danced beautifully . . . better than any man she had ever danced with. There was something sinuously graceful about his, a lithe sureness that must be his Latin heritage. She had never danced so well in her life, that was certain.

PARISH HIGH WILL OPEN ITS PROGRAM

Baccalaureate Sermon to Be Given This Afternoon at Junior College

Ouachita parish high school seniors will attend their baccalaureate sermon at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the auditorium of Ouachita parish junior college. The sermon will be delivered by Rev. Ernest Duncan Holloway, pastor of the Monroe First Presbyterian church.

The school's glee club will render vocal selections during the program and hymns are to be sung by the audience.

One hundred and ninety-six students comprise the graduating class of the parish school. Sam McClary is president of the class. Other officers are: vice-president, Durnell Witt; secretary, Olive Hodge; treasurer, Ralph Alphonse Randow. Dorothy Flanagan is valedictorian and Mildred Elliott is salutatorian.

The class motto is: "To strive, to seek, to find and not to yield." The class colors are rose and silver and the class flower is the sweet pea.

STAMP COLLECTORS MEET IN WEEKLY SESSION HERE

Regular weekly meeting of the Monroe Stamp Collectors club was held yesterday at Hotel Monroe.

Visiting stamp collectors and others who may wish to become members of the club are invited to the weekly meetings, held each Saturday afternoon at 3 p.m. at Hotel Monroe.

Next week the program will deal with United States stamp issues.

Survivor of Explosion That Sank 'Corona' Tells Story

A fine autumn morning, 44 years ago, October 11, 1888, the palatial passenger steamer "Corona," owned by Captain Jack Blanks of New Orleans, left Baton Rouge in regal splendor, as friends and relatives of the passengers stood on the docks and waved goodby to those on its decks, little suspecting the enormous tragedy which was drawing down on the ship.

The boat had just been overhauled at a port in Kentucky, and was making its maiden voyage from New Orleans to St. Louis after being put back into service. She had put out from the Crescent City several hours behind schedule the night before, and with her boilers carrying a full load had steamed at full speed up the Mississippi all night, arriving some four hours ahead of schedule and passing 16 packets which had gained several hours advantage on the trip.

The Corona was known as one of the best and fastest packets plying on the river, presenting a royal sight, worth traveling miles to see, when she steamed along with her stern paddlewheel churning the muddy water to a milky froth.

Leaving Baton Rouge, the Corona proceeded at full speed up the Mississippi to Prophet's Island, 11 miles north, where the City of St. Louis was loading sugar at a dock. The Corona gave one blast of her deep-throated, musical whistle as she passed the City of St. Louis, and 30 seconds afterward was a sinking mass of wreckage in the middle of the river. All three boilers of the packet, just as the echoes of the whistle died away, blew up with a deafening detonation, leaving the packet a tangled mass of wreckage in the river, with dead, dying and drowning passengers scattered over the water.

Heard in Baton Rouge

The blast was heard in Baton Rouge, 11 miles away, where persons thought a severe earthquake had shaken the houses and scattered dishes off the tables. On the City of St. Louis, across the river, people were knocked flat and dazed by the concussion.

Today, through a miracle, two persons survive the tragedy, in which 48 were killed outright. Several escaped, but only Mrs. H. C. Blanks, of Columbia, and her son, with whom she lives, Wayne Blanks, are living of the survivors. Mr. Blanks, who was eight years old at the time, told a graphic story of the harrowing tragedy yesterday to a Morning World reporter.

"It was about 11 o'clock," he said, "when the ship blew up. We were going along at top speed, and a man had just started down the companionway to find out how fast we were going. I was standing in the door facing the cabin, on the right side of the boat, talking to Captain Jack, my uncle, who was in the barber chair.

"I heard the deep whistle, and the next thing I knew a terrific explosion occurred, as the ship blew completely to pieces. I must have been directly over the boilers, for deckhands on the City of St. Louis said I was hurled more than 125 feet into the air. My uncle, sitting a few feet away, was thought to have fallen into the fires which broke out below with the blast, as his charred body was found three months later at Plaquemines. Wreckage sank so quickly the lifeboats could not be cut loose from the davits.

"It seemed just like a dream to me, and does yet," he said. "A negro nurse was standing on the front of the boat, holding a twin baby in her arms. She was blown into the air, and kicked me in the head as she turned over and over, knocking me from a dazed condition into complete unconsciousness. She dropped the baby while in the air, people on the City of St. Louis said."

Plunged to Bottom

When Mr. Blanks came down he plunged to the bottom of the Mississippi, coming up with mud on his hands from the river bed 100 feet below the water. Two staterooms at the stern of the boat were occupied by his mother and aunt, Mrs. J. P. Huff, of Opelousas. The blast shoved the floors of the staterooms upward, plunging his mother and aunt through the ceilings. The mother clung to her three-year-old baby girl, as the staterooms were hurled from the packet, landing in the river.

Through some miracle, the mother, her baby daughter, and the aunt found themselves on top of the floating cabins, with "Mammy Charity," negro woman servant who was wearing a life belt. The negro woman took off her life belt and gave it to the mother, as the shattered cabins were sinking rapidly. When they went down, Mrs. Huff, entangled in the wreckage was drowned, while Mrs. Blanks, her baby daughter in her arms, was sucked beneath the surface for many feet. When she came to the surface, she floated three miles before being rescued. Mrs. Huff's body was later removed from the wreckage by New Orleans divers.

Coming to the surface, Mr. Blanks, dazed and half unconscious, clung to a bale of sacking which floated past him, until the sacking became waterlogged and sank. As he struggled in the middle of the river, a barrel of flour, part of the Corona's cargo, floated down upon him, and he clung to it. A man who had climbed to a piece of wreckage, seeing the lad clinging to the barrel, attempted to throw him a piece of timber to which he might cling. The piece struck him squarely in the head, knocking him unconscious again.

He sank, and coming to the surface revived, clung to another barrel, until lifeboats from the City of St. Louis, which were put out as soon as possible, using long grapplehooks, rescued him.

Pinned to Wreckage

"I distinctly remember," Mr. Blanks said, "seeing the second engineer pinned to wreckage under the jackstaff of the Corona, which was across his legs. He was pleading with two other men to cut off his legs. His pain was something horrible. The wreckage was sinking, and the men were struggling to free him. The last I saw of them they jumped, and he was pulled down into the river in the trap, drowned.

Mr. Blanks was the first one rescued, and his mother and baby sister were the last. He was placed under a tarpaulin on the deck of the City of St. Louis, with the dead. "I came to," he said, "and heard my mother crying. I recognized her voice, and barely had strength and presence of mind to kick the covering. They pulled the tarpaulin back, and found me alive. An old Italian, who stood nearby, told my mother, 'He live, couldn't kill him.'"

Survivors were rushed to Baton Rouge, where crowds awaited the rescue packet. A doctor was taken on board, and the boat sped toward New Orleans. Mr. Blanks regained consciousness when he was being taken off the packet on a stretcher at the Crescent City docks, but only for a few seconds. He remembered the immense crowds at the docks, and that flags were flying at half-mast. Everything went black again, and for three months he did not regain consciousness.

Boiler Steel in Face

A piece of boiler steel had pierced his face just beneath the right eye, he was almost fatally scalded by live steam, and hundreds of slivers from timbers were driven through his body. Slowly he gained strength, and was an invalid for many months after the tragedy.

At Baton Rouge, word had been sent via Monroe, to his father at Columbia, "Corona blown up, all dead." The message was carried from Monroe to Columbia by Fred Habyan, mail carrier, who rode three horses in relays, at breakneck speed, to deliver the message. The father came to Monroe, and took a train to New Orleans, expecting to find his family at the morgue. Instead, he found them alive.

So great was the explosion, that a Jersey cow which his father was having brought up from a down river parish, was found one half mile from the scene of the explosion, buried in the mud of the river bank.

Today, Mr. Blanks and his mother are the only survivors.

"It still seems like a vivid dream," he said. "Still yet, when I hear a steamer whistle, a few seconds afterward I seem to hear a terrific explosion, and feel myself hurtled into the air, my body scalded and full of splinters."

The explosion which destroyed the Corona, one of the finest of river packets, has been called the greatest disaster in the history of river traffic.

'SUNSHINE' TO BE SPREAD IN CITY TOMORROW NIGHT

Songs will be rendered by a group of boy students, who are Carey Thompson, Vincent Zagone, Maurice Kessler, Walter Savage and Cyril Pecasting.

RESIDENCE BURNS

A residence located in Crescent bend addition was destroyed by fire yesterday. Firemen said the fire was caused by an oil lamp in a chicken brooder. Seventy-three baby chicks and one hen lost their lives in the flames. A. P. Tugwell was the owner of the house. It was occupied by Hattie Coates.

Next week the program will deal with United States stamp issues.

Survivor of Explosion That Sank 'Corona' Tells Story

A fine autumn morning, 44 years ago, October 11, 1888, the palatial passenger steamer "Corona," owned by Captain Jack Blanks of New Orleans, left Baton Rouge in regal splendor, as friends and relatives of the passengers stood on the docks and waved goodby to those on its decks, little suspecting the enormous tragedy which was drawing down on the ship.

The boat had just been overhauled at a port in Kentucky, and was making its maiden voyage from New Orleans to St. Louis after being put back into service. She had put out from the Crescent City several hours behind schedule the night before, and with her boilers carrying a full load had steamed at full speed up the Mississippi all night, arriving some four hours ahead of schedule and passing 16 packets which had gained several hours advantage on the trip.

The Corona was known as one of the best and fastest packets plying on the river, presenting a royal sight, worth traveling miles to see, when she steamed along with her stern paddlewheel churning the muddy water to a milky froth.

Leaving Baton Rouge, the Corona proceeded at full speed up the Mississippi to Prophet's Island, 11 miles north, where the City of St. Louis was loading sugar at a dock. The Corona gave one blast of her deep-throated, musical whistle as she passed the City of St. Louis, and 30 seconds afterward was a sinking mass of wreckage in the middle of the river. All three boilers of the packet, just as the echoes of the whistle died away, blew up with a deafening detonation, leaving the packet a tangled mass of wreckage in the river, with dead, dying and drowning passengers scattered over the water.

Heard in Baton Rouge

The blast was heard in Baton Rouge, 11 miles away, where persons thought a severe earthquake had shaken the houses and scattered dishes off the tables. On the City of St. Louis, across the river, people were knocked flat and dazed by the concussion.

Today, through a miracle, two persons survive the tragedy, in which 48 were killed outright. Several escaped, but only Mrs. H. C. Blanks, of Columbia, and her son, with whom she lives, Wayne Blanks, are living of the survivors. Mr. Blanks, who was eight years old at the time, told a graphic story of the harrowing tragedy yesterday to a Morning World reporter.

"It was about 11 o'clock," he said, "when the ship blew up. We were going along at top speed, and a man had just started down the companionway to find out how fast we were going. I was standing in the door facing the cabin, on the right side of the boat, talking to Captain Jack, my uncle, who was in the barber chair.

"I heard the deep whistle, and the next thing I knew a terrific explosion occurred, as the ship blew completely to pieces. I must have been directly over the boilers, for deckhands on the City of St. Louis said I was hurled more than 125 feet into the air. My uncle, sitting a few feet away, was thought to have fallen into the fires which broke out below with the blast, as his charred body was found three months later at Plaquemines. Wreckage sank so quickly the lifeboats could not be cut loose from the davits.

"It seemed just like a dream to me, and does yet," he said. "A negro nurse was standing on the front of the boat, holding a twin baby in her arms. She was blown into the air, and kicked me in the head as she turned over and over, knocking me from a dazed condition into complete unconsciousness. She dropped the baby while in the air, people on the City of St. Louis said."

Plunged to Bottom

When Mr. Blanks came down he plunged to the bottom of the Mississippi, coming up with mud on his hands from the river bed 100 feet below the water. Two staterooms at the stern of the boat were occupied by his mother and aunt, Mrs. J. P. Huff, of Opelousas. The blast shoved the floors of the staterooms upward, plunging his mother and aunt through the ceilings. The mother clung to her three-year-old baby girl, as the staterooms were hurled from the packet, landing in the river.

Through some miracle, the mother, her baby daughter, and the aunt found themselves on top of the floating cabins, with "Mammy Charity," negro woman servant who was wearing a life belt. The negro woman took off her life belt and gave it to the mother, as the shattered cabins were sinking rapidly. When they went down, Mrs. Huff, entangled in the wreckage was drowned, while Mrs. Blanks, her baby daughter in her arms, was sucked beneath the surface for many feet. When she came to the surface, she floated three miles before being rescued. Mrs. Huff's body was later removed from the wreckage by New Orleans divers.

Coming to the surface, Mr. Blanks, dazed and half unconscious, clung to a bale of sacking which floated past him, until the sacking became waterlogged and sank. As he struggled in the middle of the river, a barrel of flour, part of the Corona's cargo, floated down upon him, and he clung to it. A man who had climbed to a piece of wreckage, seeing the lad clinging to the barrel, attempted to throw him a piece of timber to which he might cling. The piece struck him squarely in the head, knocking him unconscious again.

He sank, and coming to the surface revived, clung to another barrel, until lifeboats from the City of St. Louis, which were put out as soon as possible, using long grapple-hooks, rescued him.

Pinned to Wreckage

"I distinctly remember," Mr. Blanks said, "seeing the second engineer pinned to wreckage under the jack-staff of the Corona, which was across his legs. He was pleading with two other men to cut off his legs. His pain was something horrible. The wreckage was sinking, and the men were struggling to free him. The last I saw of them they jumped, and he was pulled down into the river in the trap, drowned.

Mr. Blanks was the first one rescued, and his mother and baby sister were the last. He was placed under a tarpaulin on the deck of the City of St. Louis, with the dead. "I came to," he said, "and heard my mother crying. I recognized her voice, and barely had strength and presence of mind to kick the covering. They pulled the tarpaulin back, and found me alive. An old Italian, who stood nearby, told my mother, 'He live, couldn't kill him.'"

Survivors were rushed to Baton Rouge, where crowds awaited the rescue packet. A doctor was taken on board, and the boat sped toward New Orleans. Mr. Blanks regained consciousness when he was being taken off the packet on a stretcher at the Crescent City docks, but only for a few seconds. He remembered the immense crowds at the docks, and that flags were flying at half-mast. Everything went black again, and for three months he did not regain consciousness.

Boiler Steel in Face

A piece of boiler steel had pierced his face just beneath the right eye, he was almost fatally scalded by live steam, and hundreds of slivers from timbers were driven through his body. Slowly he gained strength, and was an invalid for many months after the tragedy.

At Baton Rouge, word had been sent via Monroe, to his father at Columbia, "Corona blown up, all dead." The message was carried from Monroe to Columbia by Fred Habyan, mail carrier, who rode three horses in relays, at breakneck speed, to deliver the message. The father came to Monroe, and took a train to New Orleans, expecting to find his family at the morgue. Instead, he found them alive.

So great was the explosion, that a Jersey cow which his father was having brought up from a down river parish, was found one half mile from the scene of the explosion, buried in the mud of the river bank.

Today, Mr. Blanks and his mother are the only survivors.

"It still seems like a vivid dream," he said. "Still yet, when I hear a steamer whistle, a few seconds afterward I seem to hear a terrific explosion, and feel myself hurtled into the air, my body scalded and full of splinters."

The explosion which destroyed the Corona, one of the finest of river packets, has been called the greatest disaster in the history of river traffic.

'SUNSHINE' TO BE SPREAD IN CITY TOMORROW NIGHT

Presentation of "Sunshine," a three-act musical comedy, Monday night at 8 o'clock at the auditorium of Central city grammar school, by students of St. Matthew's parochita school, will be featured by several supporting numbers.

Songs will be rendered by a group of boy students, who are Carey Thompson, Vincent Zagone, Maurice Kessler, Walter Savage and Cyril Pecasting.

RESIDENCE BURNS

A residence located in Crescent bend addition was destroyed by fire yesterday. Firemen said the fire was caused by an oil lamp in a chicken brooder. Seventy-three baby chicks and one hen lost their lives in the flames. A. P. Tugwell was the owner of the house. It was occupied by Hattie Coates.

PRISONERS TAKEN TO STATE PRISON

Eleven Are Sent From Here to Angola by Bus Yesterday Morning

A bus containing 11 prisoners who were convicted in the recent term of district court here, left yesterday morning for Angola, where the prisoners will serve their sentences in the state penitentiary. The prisoners left here in custody of Ouachita parish deputy sheriffs.

The prisoners, charges on which they were convicted and their sentence, were: Charlie Morgan, negro, life sentence for murder of Paul Pinkney, negro; Jessie Coleman, negro, six months for assault with a dangerous weapon; Dawson Crowson, life sentence for murder of Ira Castles; Red Bailey, 18 to 24 months for embezzlement; Nora Lee Morehead, negress, two to four years for manslaughter in killing of Henry Rollins, negro.

Jack Denton, extortion, one year; Earl Goldsmith, negro, four to six years for assault and robbery; George Brown, negro, 12 to 16 months for burglary; Dorcey Mitchell, negro, three years for robbery; Ernest Johnson, negro, one year for robbery; Alexander Sampson, negro, two years for robbery.

Herman Thompson, who was convicted in the recent session of court on a charge of robbery, and who was sentenced to serve 16 to 24 months in the state penitentiary, was not included in the prisoners sent to Angola as he is to be taken to Winnfield to be tried in district court there, before beginning the sentence meted by the court here. The charges against Thompson at Winnfield are in connection with robbery of a filling station with firearms.

Pet dogs must be black or gray in color to satisfy the "smart" women in Paris, and they wear little coats to match their owner's ensemble.

'SINNERS IN THE SUN'

AT THE MOVIES

PARAMOUNT

Fan mail to a motion picture director means a good deal more than mere applause. So declares Clarence Brown, who directed Joan Crawford and Robert Montgomery in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's dramatic production, "Letty Lynton," at the Paramount theater today. Most fan letters, he says, contain actual information.

"Some of them offer constructive criticisim, some suggest new stories, and often they make casting suggestions, giving the director a clew as to what actors people like to see in certain roles," says Brown. "I read mine carefully and often have found valuable suggestions."

Brown believes in the utmost care in even the smallest scene in a picture. As a matter of fact, he says, every picture has in it a certain seemingly unimportant scene which really is the "key," or starts the story of the play in motion, and this scene has to be watched with great care.

"In 'Letty Lynton,' it was the scene on the ship in which Robert Montgomery arranges to sit at Miss Crawford's table," Brown explains. "That scene was a comedy bit, but it acutally started the plot moving. Things up to then merely told the audience the nature of the characters and the general situation.

"The director has to recognize this key scene of his picture, be careful neither to underplay nor overplay it, and make it start the plot almost imperceptibly."

CAPITOL

Bellowing pistols, cracking whips, wild riding—the roaring west turned inside out in a whirlwind of screen action.

That is the sort of tidal wave of movie excitement upon which the great cowboy star, Tom Mix, comes back to the screen.

The popular Max Brand novel of a wildcat cowboy who was framed to prison by a ring of unscrupulous politicians and who emerged from the bars, years later, to pay his debt to each member of the jury, is a perfect vehicle for the virile cowpuncher. The millions of fans who wondered how Mix was going to fare with the microphones when the talkies came into vogue, will be pleased to the core when they hear him speak in a most pleasing, he-man voice.

Mix is superb in his newest role and he seems destined to bring back to motion pictures the stick of dynamite film action that they need so badly. His reputed one million fan letters will grow into many millions and one of the greatest screen stars who ever appeared before a camera is going to become even greater, as his celebrated cowboy character rides and shoots his way through our present-day film entertainment when the sound of the voice adds to the many other realisms.

HEADS ALUMNI

Mrs. N. D. Abell was elected president of the Alumni association of Neville high school at a banquet given Friday night in honor of the school's graduating class. Other officers elected were: Vice-president, Alan Sugar; secretary, Mrs. Gordon Surguine; treasurer, Miss Marie Collens.

NATURAL HISTORY CONTEST SLATED

Those Who Provide Best Answers Will Be Given Passes to Theater

How well do you know your natural history?

The Morning World will start a question and answer contest that will test the knowledge of its readers of matters ragarding the Antarctic and the Amazon country in connection with the motion picture, "Explorers of the World," which is to play an engagement at the Capitol theater beginning next Friday. Monday we will print 10 questions regarding the Antarctic, simple and uninvolved, but with a definite connection with the discovery of the south pole and the scientific discoveries made in that vast frozen territory. Tuesday we will print 10 questions regarding the little known Amazon river country.

In "Explorers of the World," six great explorers went into six practically unexplored parts of the world, taking with them motion picture cameras, and brought back thousands of feet of valuable photographic records. These explorers were Harold Noice, who invaded the fastnesses of the Amazon; Lieut. Com. J. R. Stenhouse, who led an expedition into the southern sea; Dr. Laurence M. Gould, who was second in command of the Byrd south pole expedition, caching food for the intrepid air explorer as far as he could penetrate into the Antarctic; Harold McCracken, who went into the Aleutian islands in the Arctic; Gene Lamb, who invaded the unexplored Asiatic territory, and James L. Clark, who treeked into the African wilds for his photographic records.

There is a peculiar local interest in The Morning World contest in connection with the Gould questions and answers, as it will be recalled that one of Admiral Byrd's valuable dogs met death here in an automobile accident, a fact that was heralded to the world by the press associations, the newsreel cameras and in other ways.

For the first 10 nearest correct and neatest answers sent to The Morning World, addressed to "Explorers of the World" Contest Editor, this paper will present a pair of guest tickets to the showing of the picture at the Capitol, good for any performance Friday or Saurday.

Contestants are requested to make every effort to answer correctly as many of the questions as possible, as this paper believes the contest will work to distinct advantage in gaining knowledge of the natural history and physical geography of the world. The public library may be resorted to for textbooks that will aid in answering the questions. Watch for them Monday and Tuesday.

BLACK HEN DEVELOPS TASTE FOR SWIMMING

Municipal zoo, here, has one made to order for Ripley of "Believe It or Not" fame.

A black hen at the zoo has developed a yen for swimming, and now takes a plunge along with the ducks and other aquatic birds, leaving the other chickens strictly alone.

The ducks will plunge into the water of the lagoon, start swimming to the other bank, and the hen will plunge in after them, following with all her might.

PRISONERS TAKEN TO STATE PRISON

A bus containing 11 prisoners who were convicted in the recent term of district court here, left yesterday morning for Angola, where the prisoners will serve their sentences in the state penitentiary. The prisoners left here in custody of Ouachita parish deputy sheriffs.

The prisoners, charges on which they were convicted and their sentence, were: Charlie Morgan, negro, life sentence for murder of Paul Pinkney, negro; Jessie Coleman, negro, six months for assault with a dangerous weapon; Dawson Crowson, life sentence for murder of Ira Castles; Red Bailey, 18 to 24 months for embezzlement; Nora Lee Morehead, negress, two to four years for manslaughter in killing of Henry Rollins, negro.

Jack Denton, extortion, one year; Earl Goldsmith, negro, four to six years for assault and robbery; George Brown, negro, 12 to 16 months for burglary; Dorcey Mitchell, negro, three years for robbery; Ernest Johnson, negro, one year for robbery; Alexander Sampson, negro, two years for robbery.

Herman Thompson, who was convicted in the recent session of court on a charge of robbery, and who was sentenced to serve 16 to 24 months in the state penitentiary, was not included in the prisoners sent to Angola as he is to be taken to Winnfield to be tried in district court there, before beginning the sentence meted by the court here. The charges against Thompson at Winnfield are in connection with robbery of a filling station with firearms.

'SINNERS IN THE SUN'

AT THE MOVIES

PARAMOUNT

Fan mail to a motion picture director means a good deal more than mere applause. So declares Clarence Brown, who directed Joan Crawford and Robert Montgomery in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's dramatic production, "Letty Lynton," at the Paramount theater today. Most fan letters, he says, contain actual information.

"Some of them offer constructive criticisim, some suggest new stories, and often they make casting suggestions, giving the director a clew as to what actors people like to see in certain roles," says Brown. "I read mine carefully and often have found valuable suggestions."

Brown believes in the utmost care in even the smallest scene in a picture. As a matter of fact, he says, every picture has in it a certain seemingly unimportant scene which really is the "key," or starts the story of the play in motion, and this scene has to be watched with great care.

"In 'Letty Lynton,' it was the scene on the ship in which Robert Montgomery arranges to sit at Miss Crawford's table," Brown explains. "That scene was a comedy bit, but it acutally started the plot moving. Things up to then merely told the audience the nature of the characters and the general situation.

"The director has to recognize this key scene of his picture, be careful neither to underplay nor overplay it, and make it start the plot almost imperceptibly."

CAPITOL

Bellowing pistols, cracking whips, wild riding—the roaring west turned inside out in a whirlwind of screen action.

That is the sort of tidal wave of movie excitement upon which the great cowboy star, Tom Mix, comes back to the screen.

The popular Max Brand novel of a wildcat cowboy who was framed to prison by a ring of unscrupulous politicians and who emerged from the bars, years later, to pay his debt to each member of the jury, is a perfect vehicle for the virile cowpuncher. The millions of fans who wondered how Mix was going to fare with the microphones when the talkies came into vogue, will be pleased to the core when they hear him speak in a most pleasing, he-man voice.

Mix is superb in his newest role and he seems destined to bring back to motion pictures the stick of dynamite film action that they need so badly. His reputed one million fan letters will grow into many millions and one of the greatest screen stars who ever appeared before a camera is going to become even greater, as his celebrated cowboy character rides and shoots his way through our present-day film entertainment when the sound of the voice adds to the many other realisms.

NATURAL HISTORY CONTEST SLATED

Those Who Provide Best Answers Will Be Given Passes to Theater

How well do you know your natural history?

The Morning World will start a question and answer contest that will test the knowledge of its readers of matters ragarding the Antarctic and the Amazon country in connection with the motion picture, "Explorers of the World," which is to play an engagement at the Capitol theater beginning next Friday. Monday we will print 10 questions regarding the Antarctic, simple and uninvolved, but with a definite connection with the discovery of the south pole and the scientific discoveries made in that vast frozen territory. Tuesday we will print 10 questions regarding the little known Amazon river country.

In "Explorers of the World," six great explorers went into six practically unexplored parts of the world, taking with them motion picture cameras, and brought back thousands of feet of valuable photographic records. These explorers were Harold Noice, who invaded the fastnesses of the Amazon; Lieut. Com. J. R. Stenhouse, who led an expedition into the southern sea; Dr. Laurence M. Gould, who was second in command of the Byrd south pole expedition, caching food for the intrepid air explorer as far as he could penetrate into the Antarctic; Harold McCracken, who went into the Aleutian islands in the Arctic; Gene Lamb, who invaded the unexplored Asiatic territory, and James L. Clark, who treeked into the African wilds for his photographic records.

There is a peculiar local interest in The Morning World contest in connection with the Gould questions and answers, as it will be recalled that one of Admiral Byrd's valuable dogs met death here in an automobile accident, a fact that was heralded to the world by the press associations, the newsreel cameras and in other ways.

For the first 10 nearest correct and neatest answers sent to The Morning World, addressed to "Explorers of the World" Contest Editor, this paper will present a pair of guest tickets to the showing of the picture at the Capitol, good for any performance Friday or Saurdav.

Contestants are requested to make every effort to answer correctly as many of the questions as possible, as this paper believes the contest will work to distinct advantage in gaining knowledge of the natural history and physical geography of the world. The public library may be resorted to for textbooks that will aid in answering the questions. Watch for them Monday and Tuesday.

1 JANE and Elaine seem to love the sweet somethings that Jed Stevens and "Sonny" Mason are murmuring into their pretty pink ears. "Let's ankle up to the altar," whispers Jed. "Make that a matrimonial foursome!" urges "Sonny." But watch Auntie up in the corner; she's no sapodilla!

2 "NIGHTY-NIGHT, Auntie," say the girls when they all get home. "We're retiring early this evening. Nighty-night, Mr. Warner Beansbury Smyth. Take good care of Lady Ella." "Leave her to me," laughs jolly Warner. "It's a pleasure," says Elaine.

3 WELL, what do you know! Auntie has come into the girls' room and finds they have "skedoodled." "Well, Warner and I will surprise them first thing in the morning, all right!" Ella tells herself. What's this? Something up auntie's sleeve? Looks like tricky work at the cross-roads!

1 JANE and Elaine seem to love the sweet somethings that Jed Stevens and "Sonny" Mason are murmuring into their pretty pink ears. "Let's ankle up to the altar," whispers Jed. "Make that a matrimonial foursome!" urges "Sonny." But watch Auntie up in the corner; she's no sapodilla!

2 "NIGHTY-NIGHT, Auntie," say the girls when they all get home. "We're retiring early this evening. Nighty-night, Mr. Warner Beansbury Smyth. Take good care of Lady Ella." "Leave her to me," laughs jolly Warner. "It's a pleasure," says Elaine.

3 WELL, what do you know! Auntie has come into the girls' room and finds they have "skedoodled." "Well, Warner and I will surprise them first thing in the morning, all right!" Ella tells herself. What's this? Something up auntie's sleeve? Looks like tricky work at the cross-roads!

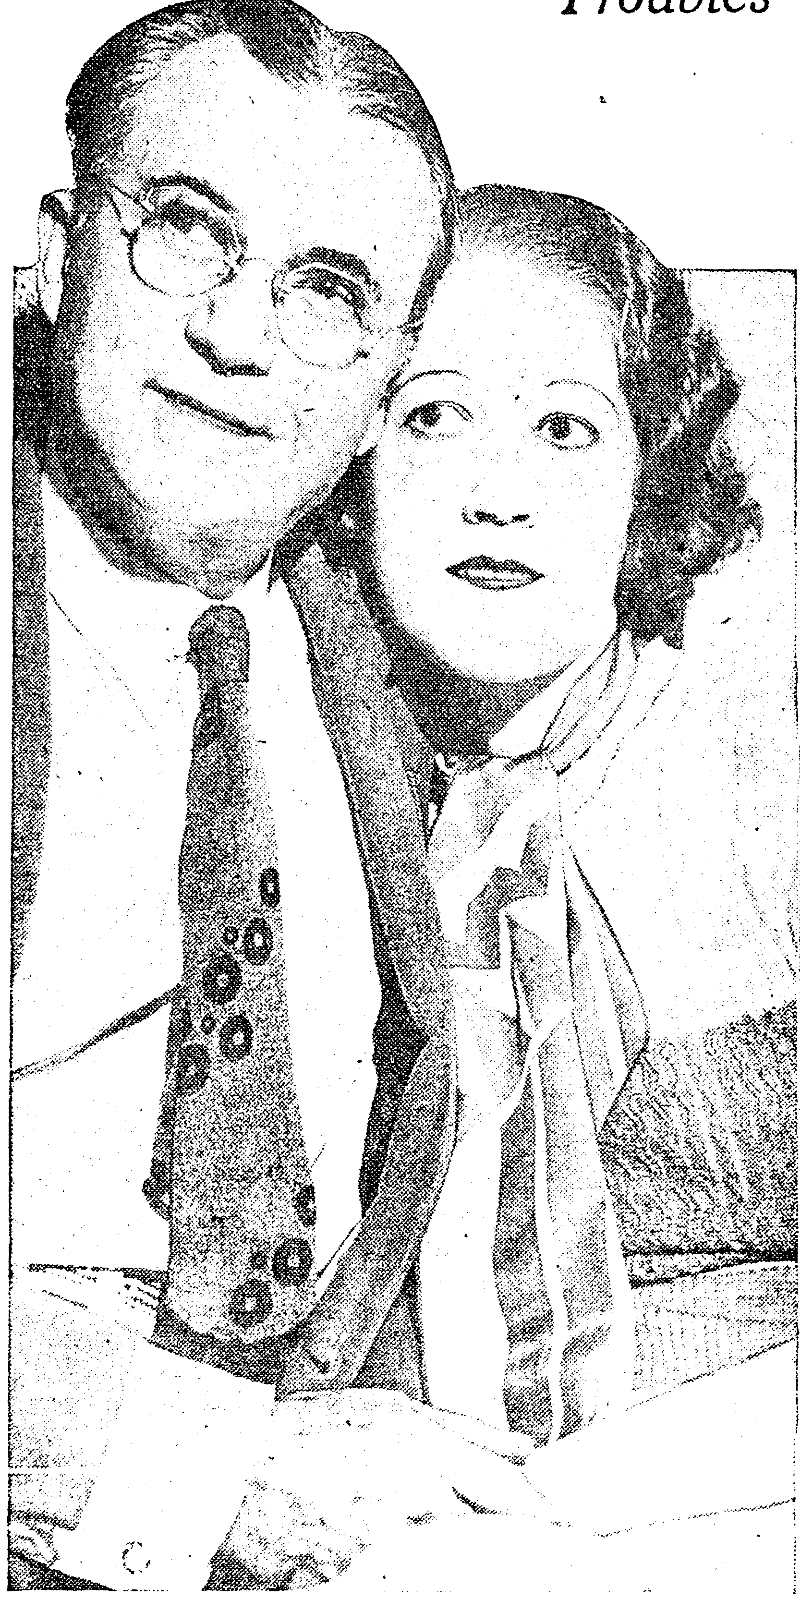
Mr. Brewster's Newest "Dearest Girl on Earth" Romance, Nº 5

The Very Happy Solution Planned by the Ex-Millionaire to a Ten-Year Tangle of Love, Marriages, Divorces, Finances, Beauty and Domestic Troubles



Eugene V. Brewster, Whose Two Marriages to the "Adorable Blonde" Corliss Palmer, Were Followed by Impecuniosity, Photographed with Dorothy McCormick, Whom He Calls "Dearest Girl on Earth."

Beautiful Corliss Palmer Temporarily Turned Brunette, as Shown Above, Because a Hollywood Director Thought She Would Screen Better That Way. Brewster "Stepped Aside," He Said, to Further Her Film Ambitions.

A Camera Portrait of Mrs. Eugene V. Brewster, No. 2, and Her Son, Virgil, Taken When She Was Fighting Tooth and Nail in New York Courts to Prevent Her Husband from Divorcing Her and Wedding Corliss.

RECENTLY, when Eugene V. Brewster, ex-millionaire magazine publisher, announced plans for his fifth jaunt to the marriage altar—this time accompanied by the comely Dorothy McCormick, opera singer and writer, certain Hollywood people with disturbingly long memories asked, "Is this lady to be his latest 'dearest girl on earth'?"

For that is exactly the phrase the much-married Mr. Brewster used on two separate occasions some years ago to describe beautiful Corliss Palmer, the beauty contest winner and film actress for love of whom he smilingly relinquished his huge fortune and the control of a string of highly lucrative movie "fan" magazines.

Just what happened to blast that famous "poor girl-rich man" romance may never be completely explained to the general public. However, the proclamation that Corliss and Brewster are to be divorced after which the former millionaire will marry Miss McCormick definitely confirmed recurrent rumors that all was not well in the Brewster love nest.

The middle-aged Eugene was as loquacious and as philosophical as ever about his matrimonial affairs. Corliss, according to him, is eager for laurels on the silver screen. "Marriage, it seems, is an obstacle to a career in Hollywood," he explained to reporters in the film capital, "so I am stepping aside and giving Corliss her chance."

When making this original statement of the reasons why Mrs. Brewster and he weren't going places and doing things together any more, Eugene, it is said, didn't bring the name of his latest bride-to-be into the discussion.

However, some weeks later he amended his Cyrano-like story with, "I have fallen in love again and with a young and beautiful woman. She is the dearest girl on earth. But certain matters must be straightened out before we can get married. She is backing me in a new publishing business, through which I hope to retrieve my lost fortune."

Hints were dropped that the great difference in age between the ex-magazine king and the glamorous, golden-haired Corliss had more than a little to do with the rift. Asked what Corliss thought about all this, Eugene answered: "Corliss is young and attractive. She may soon fall in love with another man. Than we can be divorced and I can marry the woman I love."

Brewster cogitated a moment, then added, "Though the matter has never been discussed thoroughly between us, I will probably take some steps shortly towards a legal separation from my present wife." In addition, he repeated the opinion that he would recoup his shattered fortune by the time Corliss had obtained her divorce, making it possible for him to maintain the lady he says he hopes to wed in the splendid style to which she is accustomed.

Ten years or so ago Corliss Palmer was a poor, but proud beauty who dreamed her dreams of romance and riches behind a Macon, Georgia, cigar counter. Almost a thousand miles away Eugene V. Brewster was directing the publication of his nationally known movie "fan" magazines. His office was in Brooklyn, N. Y., and his home was on Long Island.

He was rich—worth $3,000,000 people said. He had been twice married. His first mate had been Mrs. Emile C. Churguck, writer and politician. After eighteen years of matrimony they were divorced in 1914 and Eugene chose Eleanor Cator, of Far Rockaway, N. Y., as his second bride.

Then one day the Brewster publications ran a nation-wide beauty contest to choose a girl so breathlessly lovely that she would be able to enter films at once and win the heart of the world. Among the thousands of young girls who sent their photographs in to the contest editor was the exquisite Corliss.

Some people declare that the then wealthy Eugene gasped when he first gazed upon the ineffable likeness of the Georgia damsel. Anyway, when the winners were announced Miss Palmer was among them. She came to New York.

According to Mrs. Brewster No. 2, it was the heart of the highly susceptible Eugene she won at once. He showered gifts upon Corliss, No. 2 complained, chief among which was a $1,000,000 mansion in Morristown, N. J. But all his money and influence could not buy Corliss the film fame she craved.

Into a less pretentious residence on Early street, Morristown, and only a few minutes walk from Brewster's magnificent home, the entire family of the Georgia beauty moved. According to the talk along gossipy Broadway, Brewster wanted to marry his "dearest girl on earth" then and there, but there was a serious obstacle to this plan, namely his current wife.

Some time later when Eugene and Corliss sailed for a vacation in Bermuda he was asked whether he planned to wed the beauty contest winner soon. He shook his head sadly and said:

"I only wish we could. I have now known Miss Palmer for a long time. She is the dearest girl on earth. I grow more fond of her daily. Of course you know her whole family has been living recently in Morristown, N. J."

The Auction Bill of Sale for Miss Palmer's Furs Which Mrs. Brewster, No. 2, Instructed Her Lawyers to Seize on Hearing They Were to Be Sold to the Highest Bidder.

The answer Mrs. Brewster No. 2 made to this romantic series of remarks was a $200,000 alienation suit against the "dearest girl on earth." Brewster had been anything but backward in publicly describing how deep was the well of his affection for the defendant in this action. "We've determined to find our happiness in the best way we can," he was quoted in newspapers, "even though Mrs. Brewster refuses to make it possible for us to marry."

After that came the first intimation of the coming crash of Eugene's fortune. The million dollar love nest in Morristown was offered for sale. The love birds moved to Los Angeles, California.

Word came to Mrs. Brewster No. 2 that her husband was plotting a divorce in the State of Sonora, Mexico. "He will never marry Corliss Palmer," her lawyer declared. But Brewster went through with his Mexican divorce threat and immediately did exactly what the Long Island matron's attorney declared he never could do.

With the $200,000 alienation suit still pending, Mrs. Brewster No. 2 went to District Attorney Edwards of Nassau County, New York, and made a request that criminal proceedings be brought against Eugene. Her attorney C. H. Tuttle, described the Mexican nuptials as "scandalous and unlawful."

"Mrs. Brewster feels, in fighting for her own rights," he said, "that she is fighting for the protection all American women are entitled to against the kind of fraud attempted in this case."

With the excitement at its height, the New York wife demanded an accounting of the publishing business. In her separation agreement she claimed that half the assets of the concern had been set aside to insure the payment of $200 weekly to her and their son Virgil, then six years old.

To make the financial tangle a little more complicated the New York courts declared her the winner in the $200,000 alienation of affections suit. "A pretty pickle this is," Eugene in Los Angeles must have commented to Corliss.

But the affairs of the harassed millionaire became even more mixed up a little later when the astute and indefatigable lawyers for the Long Island Mrs. Brewster started another $200,000 suit for damages, this time against the "fan" magazine monarch himself. Supreme Court Justice Delehanty in New York granted a $50,000 attachment against the secretary of the Brewster Publications, Inc. This meant that the valuable property would be tied up until trial of the new action.

They talked then of extraditing Eugene from California where he was honeymooning with Corliss. No end appeared to be in sight. But, in the nick of time, the lawyers for Eugene and the lawyers for Mrs Brewster, No. 2, got together for a nice long talk.

Three weeks later the latter's counsel announced that the very involved litigation was all cleared up. Eugene had sold Brewster Publications, Inc., to several other officers of the company.

The price was not disclosed but one close to those who swung the deal admitted that the property had been transferred "to protect Mrs. Brewster's financial rights." And that was that! Corliss and Brewster were re-married to make their Mexican nuptials more binding and they seemed quite happy and contented even though much of Eugene's bankroll had disappeared via the legal route.

Now Corliss was free to follow her film career under the careful guidance of her sponsor-husband. He spoke of founding his own film company and putting Corliss on the Hollywood map in a great big way.

Somehow this project didn't quite pan out as scheduled. Even though Eugene had been giving out romantic statements such as, "I find in Corliss the perfect complement to my creative genius," the world-beating romance combination did not find the door to fame and fortune opening with the rapidity anticipated.

In fact a year or so later Eugene and Corliss disposed of the luxurious large home they had taken in Los Angeles and auctioned off the art objects, antiques, paintings and rare editions that Brewster had been accumulating for a quarter of a century.

"We want to live simply and have taken a hotel bungalow," he said. "Corliss has been working in so many motion pictures of late that we have not had the time to keep house."

A few months ago they were living in a humble three-room cottage. Then came the announcement of the separation. Shortly afterwards the cottage was foreclosed. But Eugene did not lose hope.

Today at an age close to sixty, Eugene Brewster sees a new and brilliant career opening before him. When Corliss and he are divorced, he plans to marry the twenty-five-year-old Dorothy McCormick and start anew.

Each time he has married, his chosen mate was a young woman. His second wife was more youthful than his first. Corliss, of course, was younger than No. 2. And Dorothy McCormick is several years less than Miss Palmer's age.

Hollywood is watching with interest the romantic, elderly gentleman's attempt to come back financially. He has come through all his misfortunes and troubles smiling and willing. Will Eugene be able to scale the peak of success once more?

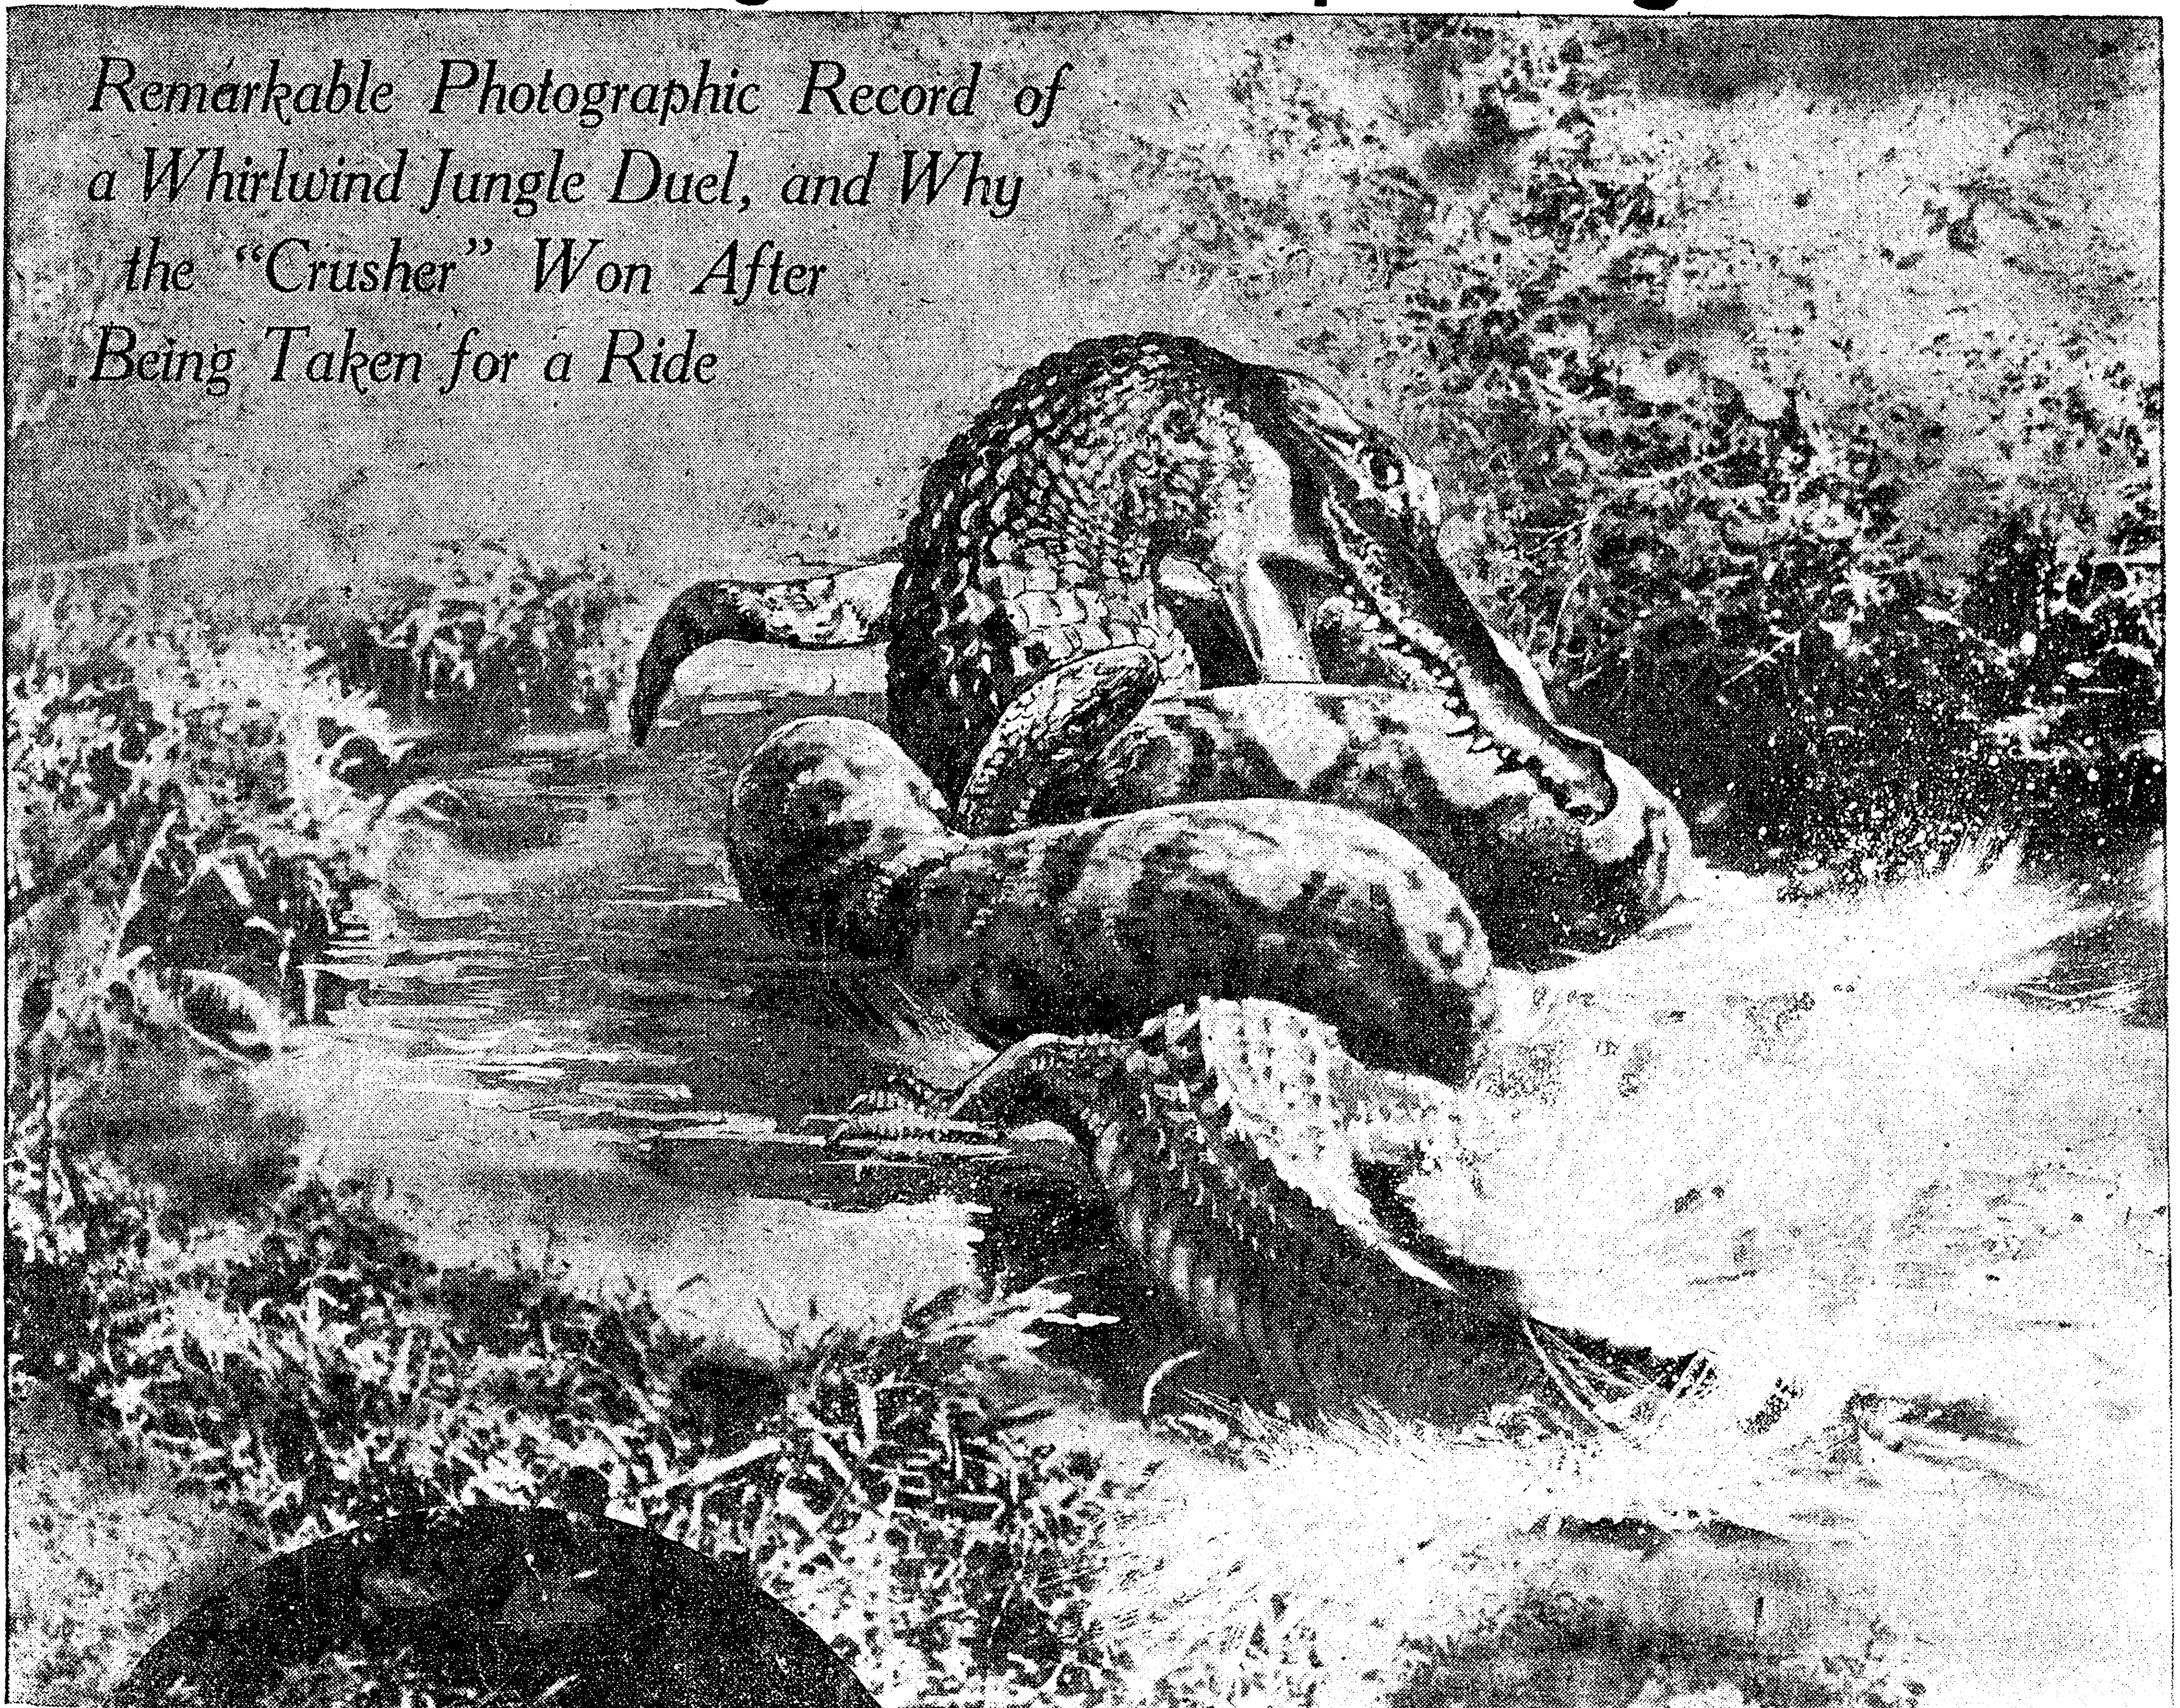
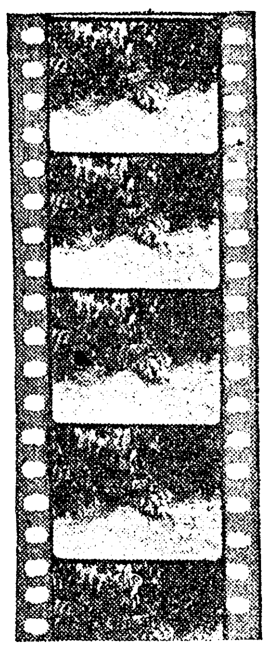
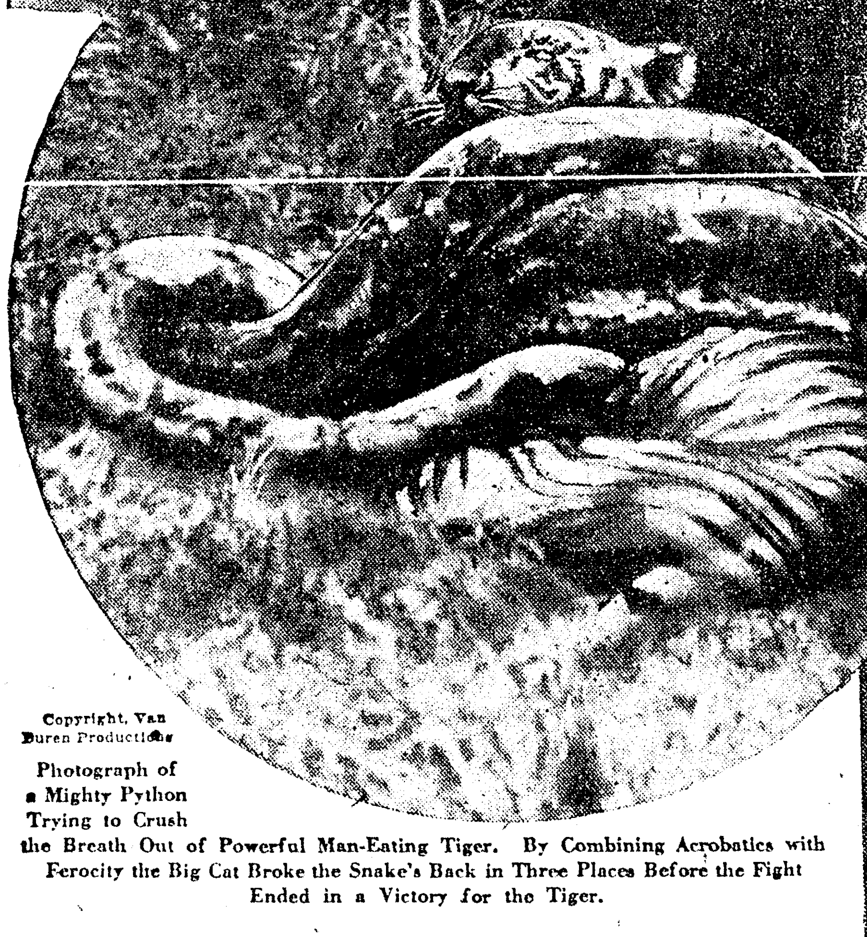
When the 26-ft. Python Tried Squeezing a 14-ft. Crocodile

Remarkable Photographic Record of a Whirlwind Jungle Duel, and Why the "Crusher" Won After Being Taken for a Ride





Part of the Motion Picture Film Record of the Battle Between the Python and the Tiger.



Copyright, Van Buren Productions

Photograph of a Mighty Python Trying to Crush the Breath Out of Powerful Man-Eating Tiger. By Combining Acrobatics with Ferocity the Big Cat Broke the Snake's Back in Three Places Before the Fight Ended in a Victory for the Tiger.

This Remarkable Photograph Was Taken by a Daring Cameraman During a Savage Life-and-Death Fight Between a Crocodile and a 26-Foot Long Python in the Swampy Jungles of the Malay Peninsula. The Crocodile Tried to Drown the Huge Snake by Carrying Him Under Water but the Python's Astonishing Squeezing Powers Won Out for Him in the End Against the Amphibian.

This Composite Photograph Shows Frank Buck, Leader of the Malay Expedition, One of His Captured Cub Tigers and the Gaping Jaws of a Fighting Crocodile.

IT was so hot in the Malay jungle one day recently that the very air seemed to crackle with heat waves. Halfway out of a swampy pool a giant crocodile, fourteen feet long, lay sunning himself. Like the rest of the jungle's wild creatures he seemed asleep.

Twenty feet away, concealed behind some underbrush four men stood waiting. They had been standing like that for hours. They didn't speak, they didn't smoke, they hardly moved. One of the men was Frank Buck, whose latest book, "Wild Cargo," is creating a sensation.

The others were members of his Malay jungle motion picture expedition party. They had come from America, thousands of miles away, to photograph battles between savage jungle animals. They had been waiting like this for weeks in the Malay swamp country, one hundred and fifty miles from Singapore.

The cameraman started his machine. The others could see the python now, slithering over the ground, head raised a little as though on the lookout for enemies. The crocodile appeared not to move at first but then, almost imperceptibly his great jaws opened.

Evidently he was waiting, too. The python stopped a few feet away from the crocodile. The snake was a huge fellow. Buck mentally estimated his length at twenty-six feet. After a few minutes the python approached still closer to the crocodile but in a roundabout manner.

The other creature now had his gaping jaws wide open as though in a yawn. The rest of his horn-covered body had not moved the slightest bit. Suddenly the python shot forward and as he did the crocodile flung his head up and snapped his jaws too speedily for the naked eyes of the four human watchers to follow.

He missed the long, sinuous snake by inches, however, and with incredible rapidity the python had coiled the upper part of his powerful body around the crocodile and was giving him a "scissor squeeze" that any human world champion wrestler might well have envied.

Slowly the crocodile started to back up into the water. The python tried to hold him motionless on the bank. It was as though both sensed that if the pool were gained the crocodile would win but if he were prevented from backing up the other giant reptile would win the impending life-and-death struggle.

The men in the bushes noticed that the crocodile was again opening his mouth but not very quickly, as though he were not yet fully alive to the danger. Frank Buck later explained that this amphibian reptile can snap his toothy jaws closed in a second but that he cannot open them nearly so rapidly.

However, this time he managed to catch a coil of the python's body in his sharp teeth and they closed on it. But the snake wriggled out of this with astonishing agility, but not before his enemy had ripped part of his back open!

From that time on the python was careful to keep his coils free of the crocodile's head. The watchers could see now the giant python's body tightening around the crocodile. All at once the crocodile became amazingly active. His vicious tail churned up the turgid water of the pool as he wiggled and wormed his way back into the mud.

He was trying to take Mr. Python for a ride! The big snake tried to pull him back but the crocodile was carrying the passenger that was smothering him right back into the water. Some instinct seemed to tell the crocodile that if he could submerge and stay that way the big snake would eventually die under water.

Or possibly he was merely trying to get away from the monster that was strangling him! However, tugging and twisting every inch of the way, he got back into the shallow pool. Then he attempted a thing which experts declare crocodiles rarely try! He tried to turn over on his back!

Unfortunately for retreating Mr. Crocodile the water in which he had been resting so peacefully a few minutes before was shallow. He could not drag the python under by submerging or turning around on his back!

Then began the most spectacular part of the battle. Finding himself foiled the crocodile, snapping and croaking, rolled over again and again in the water, carrying the python whirling around with him.

"How long can this last?" asked one of the watchers, in an excited whisper. Buck shrugged his shoulders, "Human beings see such fights once in a lifetime, if at all!"

One moment it seemed that the crocodile would win, the next moment it appeared that the python had the upper hand. Suddenly both reptiles sank out of sight. But a furious upheaval in the water proved that their fierce struggle was continuing unabated.

A few seconds later, they rose again and now it looked as though the mighty crocodile was through. His movements seemed weary and the python was squeezing him tighter and ever tighter.

Gradually the entwined animals moved backward to the shore! The python was dragging his still living prey back once again to the battlefield he preferred. The sight of the huge snake twisting first to the right and then to the left thrilled the unlookers.

After what seemed to be an eternity the python got the feeble, but still struggling, crocodile out of the water. Then a cracking noise came to the ears of the explorers above the whirring of the movie camera.

The python was crushing the tough-hided amphibian reptile to death. After the crocodile had succumbed the great snake lay coiled tightly around him for a long while. Then he disentangled himself and glided slowly away into the jungle.

"Indigestible," laughed another. "I don't think that even a python's stomach could stand crocodile meat."

A few days later the party enjoyed the extraordinary fortune of witnessing another life-and-death struggle—this time between a python and a tiger. They were walking a little distance away from the pool where the python had killed the crocodile, hoping to be able to photograph a similar savage struggle.

Suddenly they heard a bellowing some distance away. It sounded like the yowling of a tiger. They rushed through the jungle and in a little clearing came upon a big cat fighting another giant python.

The python had managed to coil once about the great tiger but the latter was tearing away with his teeth like a fury. He leaped into the air but the python still clung and slowly, as the cameraman got into action, the powerful reptile managed to twice again coil himself around the tiger's silken body. Ripping and tearing away, the big cat gave battle. He ducked like a boxer, pawed, snapped furiously and wriggled down on his side, but all to no avail. The python seemed to be winning.

No power on earth seemed capable of forcing the great snake to let go. Then the tiger did an extraordinary thing. He rose straight upon his hind legs and plunged over backwards. The python was caught under him and crushed. The tiger scrambled to his feet, twisted and turned first this way and then that until he finally disentangled himself. When the python fell to the ground the tiger leaped upon him and started tearing him to pieces.

Finally the python ceased to wriggle. But it was long after that the tiger ceased his attack. When he finally became convinced that his enemy was really dead he stopped, sniffed all along the sinuous still body and then trotted away into the jungle.

When the American exploring party picked up what remained of poor Mr. Python they discovered that the ferocious tiger had done his killer's work perfectly. The back of the big snake had been broken in three places.

When the 26-ft. Python Tried Squeezing a 14-ft. Crocodile

This Remarkable Photograph Was Taken by a Daring Cameraman During a Savage Life-and-Death Fight Between a Crocodile and a 26-Foot Long Python in the Swampy Jungles of the Malay Peninsula. The Crocodile Tried to Drown the Huge Snake by Carrying Him Under Water but the Python's Astonishing Squeezing Powers Won Out for Him in the End Against the Amphibian.

Photograph of a Mighty Python Trying to Crush the Breath Out of Powerful Man-Eating Tiger. By Combining Acrobatics with Ferocity the Big Cat Broke the Snake's Back in Three Places Before the Fight Ended in a Victory for the Tiger.

This Composite Photograph Shows Frank Buck, Leader of the Malay Expedition, One of His Captured Cub Tigers and the Gaping Jaws of a Fighting Crocodile.

IT was so hot in the Malay jungle one day recently that the very air seemed to crackle with heat waves. Halfway out of a swampy pool a giant crocodile, fourteen feet long, lay sunning himself. Like the rest of the jungle's wild creatures he seemed asleep.

Twenty feet away, concealed behind some underbrush four men stood waiting. They had been standing like that for hours. They didn't speak, they didn't smoke, they hardly moved. One of the men was Frank Buck, whose latest book, "Wild Cargo," is creating a sensation.

The others were members of his Malay jungle motion picture expedition party. They had come from America, thousands of miles away, to photograph battles between savage jungle animals. They had been waiting like this for weeks in the Malay swamp country, one hundred and fifty miles from Singapore.

Nothing had happened. The heat was almost unbearable, but still the four men stood waiting, one with movie camera poised. Buck swept the surrounding jungle with his powerful field glasses, then whispered one word, "Python!"

The cameraman started his machine. The others could see the python now, slithering over the ground, head raised a little as though on the lookout for enemies. The crocodile appeared not to move at first but then, almost imperceptibly his great jaws opened.

Evidently he was waiting, too. The python stopped a few feet away from the crocodile. The snake was a huge fellow. Buck mentally estimated his length at twenty-six feet. After a few minutes the python approached still closer to the crocodile but in a roundabout manner.

The other creature now had his gaping jaws wide open as though in a yawn. The rest of his horn-covered body had not moved the slightest bit. Suddenly the python shot forward and as he did the crocodile flung his head up and snapped his jaws too speedily for the naked eyes of the four human watchers to follow.

He missed the long, sinuous snake by inches, however, and with incredible rapidity the python had coiled the upper part of his powerful body around the crocodile and was giving him a "scissor squeeze" that any human world champion wrestler might well have envied.

Slowly the crocodile started to back up into the water. The python tried to hold him motionless on the bank. It was as though both sensed that if the pool were gained the crocodile would win but if he were prevented from backing up the other giant reptile would win the impending life-and-death struggle.

The men in the bushes noticed that the crocodile was again opening his mouth but not very quickly, as though he were not yet fully alive to the danger. Frank Buck later explained that this amphibian reptile can snap his toothy jaws closed in a second but that he cannot open them nearly so rapidly.

However, this time he managed to catch a coil of the python's body in his sharp teeth and they closed on it. But the snake wriggled out of this with astonishing agility, but not before his enemy had ripped part of his back open!

From that time on the python was careful to keep his coils free of the crocodile's head. The watchers could see now the giant python's body tightening around the crocodile. All at once the crocodile became amazingly active. His vicious tail churned up the turgid water of the pool as he wiggled and wormed his way back into the mud.

He was trying to take Mr. Python for a ride! The big snake tried to pull him back but the crocodile was carrying the passenger that was smothering him right back into the water. Some instinct seemed to tell the crocodile that if he could submerge and stay that way the big snake would eventually die under water.

Or possibly he was merely trying to get away from the monster that was strangling him! However, tugging and twisting every inch of the way, he got back into the shallow pool. Then he attempted a thing which experts declare crocodiles rarely try! He tried to turn over on his back!

Unfortunately for retreating Mr. Crocodile the water in which he had been resting so peacefully a few minutes before was shallow. He could not drag the python under by submerging or turning around on his back!

Then began the most spectacular part of the battle. Finding himself foiled the crocodile, snapping and croaking, rolled over again and again in the water, carrying the python whirling around with him.

"How long can this last?" asked one of the watchers, in an excited whisper. Buck shrugged his shoulders, "Human beings see such fights once in a lifetime, if at all!"

One moment it seemed that the crocodile would win, the next moment it appeared that the python had the upper hand. Suddenly both reptiles sank out of sight. But a furious upheaval in the water proved that their fierce struggle was continuing unabated.

A few seconds later, they rose again and now it looked as though the mighty crocodile was through. His movements seemed weary and the python was squeezing him tighter and ever tighter.

Gradually the entwined animals moved backward to the shore! The python was dragging his still living prey back once again to the battlefield he preferred. The sight of the huge snake twisting first to the right and then to the left thrilled the unlookers.

After what seemed to be an eternity the python got the feeble, but still struggling, crocodile out of the water. Then a cracking noise came to the ears of the explorers above the whirring of the movie camera.

"Spooks" Talked Right Out in Court

Mystery of the Psychic Beauty and Two Deep Bass Voices Which Sir Oliver Lodge and Other Famous Spiritualists Have Been Trying to Explain to an Amazed British Judge

By a Special Correspondent.
LONDON.

AN amazing and unprecedented thing has just upset and scandalized a dignified London courtroom.

While Mr. Justice McCardie was summing up in a sensational defamation of character trial brought by a popular woman spiritualist, Mrs. Meurig Morris, the medium suddenly rose from her chair.

To the bewilderment of the entire court a fantastic change came over the small and very feminine figure of the woman. Her face went pale, her jaw stiffened, her eyes closed. Most strange of all to some spectators her face seemed transformed into that of an old man.

Then a deep, bass voice spoke, "Hearken to my words, Oh, Brother Judge!"

The words came from the woman's throat but they sounded utterly unlike the ones with which she had answered questions. The presiding jurist, unimpressed by the weird interruption, said "Take her out!"

"Let her speak!" shouted excited spectators.

Nevertheless, English court procedure being what it is, the woman, apparently in a trance, was taken out of the room. For hours the medium remained in the trance, according to some of those who examined her.

The "spirit voices" that spoke right out in court climaxed a sensational trial that has been thrilling all London for days. Not only the eminence of some of the witnesses—Sir Oliver Lodge and Lady Arthur Conan Doyle both testified—but the nature of the eerie evidence made the action absolutely unique in the history of British jurisprudence.

For some time Mrs. Morris had been giving "trance sermons" at the Fortune Theatre, Covent Garden. She brought suit recently, alleging it had been said of her, "I have discovered one thing definitely about Mrs. Meurig Morris...her sub-conscious mind is crammed with spiritualistic jargon, which she can trot out and hang on any peg which may be given her as a text on a subject for a sermon."

The defamation of character trial that followed excited interest from the start. Mrs. Morris has a large following and these believers in her sincerity jammed the courtroom.

As her counsel outlined the attack on her integrity before Justice McCardie and the jury, Mrs. Morris wept and later, while taking the oath in the witness-box, she burst into fresh tears. The court had to adjourn until she recovered her composure.

Testimony brought out the fact that Mrs. Morris now in her early forties, was the daughter of a market gardener and had completed her education at the age of thirteen. Even as a young girl, it was stated, she was mystic and had the strange faculty of seeing people who were not present or visible to others.

Her counsel added that in her trances Mrs. Morris would sometimes act as a little child. He attributed her development as a trance medium to the time when she began to preach sermons.

She preached this first public sermon less than seven years ago. In January, 1929, the lawyer said Mrs. Morris and her husband were living in a single room in dire poverty. She was getting nothing from her work.

Last year, however, she began her services in the Fortune Theatre, Covent Garden and attracted considerable attention. She had no idea what happened to her while in a trance, her attorney declared. "Her theory," he said softly, "is that a spirit uses her to deliver a message to a spiritualistic congregation.

"That is the theory of the spiritualist movement—that these things happen because the spirits of the dead can and do convey messages to the living, and the person who speaks in the ringing baritone voice that fills the largest halls is some indefinite presence that is spoken of as 'Power'—the power behind Mrs. Morris.

"It has not been claimed to be any definite person who ever lived in this world, but she delivers in a man's ringing voice long sermons far beyond the powers of an ignorant country girl brought up in a village school with no access to learning from that day to this."

The physiological changes which the lawyer said Mrs. Morris undergoes while preaching he claimed no ordinary human could endure. One side of her body goes cold, he asserted, and her pulse leaps up to 130. She could not feel anything if needles were driven into her or if she were cut by knife or razor, he added.

Mrs. Morris's personal description of her first public trance was even more striking. "I felt I was getting smaller and seemed to be floating away," she declared. She testified her sensations were different at other services, particularly when "Power" controlled her.

Under questioning by Mr. Justice McCardie, she expressed the belief that "Power" was the spirit of some person who had died but who would not disclose his identity. "I believe we are spirits now, and that 'Power' is a spirit passed over who communes through me with the people here," she explained.

About the sensation of being "controlled" Mrs. Morris was also very explicit. "I first of all see a great yellow light like a searchlight which comes right over my ears," she told the court. "I feel myself getting very big. My neck gets bigger, and I seem to be a strange, strong personality. As I get bigger this personality overpowers me so that I lose my own consciousness."

Mrs. Morris, during the examination, also mentioned a "Sister Magdalene," another "spirit" with whom she had communicated. She said she had never taken any money at all for her sermons except when her husband was out of work and "we were awfully poor."

However she did receive fees of a dollar or two at that time, she admitted and got some of the profits of a spiritualistic play which she helped produce. These weird revelations and the whispered news that Sir Oliver Lodge and the widow of the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle were to be summoned to testify electrified all England.

The days that followed again found large crowds besieging the doors of the court and fresh sensations were prominently publicized. Mrs. Violet Tweedale, an aged authoress, told the court that when Mrs. Morris went into a trance it was dangerous to touch her.

Mrs. Tweedale also confirmed the claim that at those times the medium's body became like ice, her body stiffened to an astonishing degree and her pretty face was replaced by the visage of an old man. And this, the court was destined to see for itself later.

The novelist added mysteriously, "There are myriads of evil controls that would take possession of the human body if they could, but if you are a decent living woman they cannot do it."

On another day the jury and lawyers went from the law courts by motor to see a short "spiritualistic talking film" Mrs. Morris had made. Another melodramatic feature of the trial was the announcement by Mrs. Morris, while on the stand, that the "spirit" she called "Sister Magdalene" was in court.

"I wish you could see her," she whispered. Questioned as to how the "spirit" was dressed the medium said "in purple," and when Mr. Justice McCardie wanted to know if the spooky visitor was moving and if her eyes and face were perceptible to the witness, Mrs. Morris answered, "She is stationary; just watching me. I see her absolutely. I have the clairvoyant power to do so. I wish you could see her."

Mrs. Morris also described "Little Sunshine," and "Sister Annette," who looked about 30 and wore a long white flowing robe with girdle, and "The Squaw," who had a feathered band around her forehead. These, she explained to the skeptical court, were other mediums whose voices were sometimes heard issuing from her lips when she went into a trance.

When the patriarchal Sir Oliver Lodge, physicist extraordinary and possibly the most famous spiritualist in the world, appeared in court he wholeheartedly backed the claims of the medium's psychic powers.

"It is a phenomenon that must be recognized," the octogenarian scientist declared fervently, "that a person can leave the body to be manipulated by another intelligence. That has been established as a fact by those who have studied psychic science."

The savant admitted that this theory had not been universally recognized by scientific men, but he added the opinion that the number of sceptics was being constantly reduced.

Sir Oliver declared he could communicate with the other world only through a medium. "You live in a world of illusions," he reported saying to the "spirit" of his dead son. "So do you, father," he quoted Raymond as answering.

Lady Conan Doyle, another staunch believer in communication with the dead, agreed with other witnesses that Mrs. Morris's sermons were both deep and profound. She described her eighteen years of psychic study with her husband. Once she observed, "It is time the world was in touch with the spiritual forces. It has been proved that we can be led and influenced by those on the other side."

The astonishing and "spooky" trial continued for many weeks. Interest in it never abated. One day a phonograph record was played in the solemn courtroom. On one side was the natural, feminine voice of the medium, on the other her unnatural bass voice while under the influence of "Power."

Defence counsel partly countered the evidence of the plantiff by placing on the stand a charwoman employed in the house where Laurence Cowen, producer of the spiritual play, lived. This woman said that Mrs. Morris visited with the impresario of the "spook" drama and engaged in what the witness interpreted as "rehearsals" of a play.

The charwoman testified she listened at the door of Cowen's library and "I heard Mrs. Morris speaking in her own voice and then in the voice of another woman. Then it seemed as if she were trying to talk in the back of the throat with a very thick voice."

The suit failed. Justice McCardie found for the defense, but awarded Mrs. Morris the costs of the action.

"It is a phenomenon that must be recognized," the octogenarian scientist declared fervently, "that a person can leave the body to be manipulated by another intelligence. That has been established as a fact by those who have studied psychic science."

The savant admitted that this theory had not been universally recognized by scientific men, but he added the opinion that the number of sceptics was being constantly reduced.

Sir Oliver declared he could communicate with the other world only through a medium. "You live in a world of illusions," he reported saying to the "spirit" of his dead son. "So do you, father," he quoted Raymond as answering.

Lady Conan Doyle, another staunch believer in communication with the dead, agreed with other witnesses that Mrs. Morris's sermons were both deep and profound. She described her eighteen years of psychic study with her husband. Once she observed, "It is time the world was in touch with the spiritual forces. It has been proved that we can be led and influenced by those on the other side."

The astonishing and "spooky" trial continued for many weeks. Interest in it never abated. One day a phonograph record was played in the solemn courtroom. On one side was the natural, feminine voice of the medium, on the other her unnatural bass voice while under the influence of "Power."

Defence counsel partly countered the evidence of the plantiff by placing on the stand a charwoman employed in the house where Laurence Cowen, producer of the spiritual play, lived. This woman said that Mrs. Morris visited with the impresario of the "spook" drama and engaged in what the witness interpreted as "rehearsals" of a play.

The charwoman testified she listened at the door of Cowen's library and "I heard Mrs. Morris speaking in her own voice and then in the voice of another woman. Then it seemed as if she were trying to talk in the back of the throat with a very thick voice."

THE QUEEN'S ELEPHANTS

by Frank Condon

"LITTLE man," exclaimed Harmony Childs, standing upon a Turkey red rug in the sitting-room of an ornate suite in a famous New York hotel, and pointing with his index finger at Omar Gill, "little man, I am not going to Leesburg."

"And why?" demanded the junior partner.

"Because I would not like any town named Leesburg. I am the kind of a fellow that just naturally couldn't stand a town called Leesburg."

Harmony Childs is a tall, pleasant-featured man with a good presence, and Omar is a red-faced, excitable, runty little shad with no presence at all.

"Pooh," he said. "Don't talk nonsense. We would only have to be there two days."

"Two days, two hours, two minutes or two sesterces, I say no. Go by yourself and leave me here in New York City, a nice collection of houses some of which are not speakeasies."

The two adventurers in refined skulduggery and light brigandage argued and named each other names that would mean death except between friends. Harmony and Omar, crooked as rams' horns, with never an honest day's toil behind them, had succeeded in scouring a smart New York grafter, who thought he was scouring them, and the net profit therefrom was the sum of eight thousand dollars, which they divided evenly on the rug. They were therefore plentifully in funds. They had purchased expensive raiment. Their appearance was that of men accustomed to success. Their rooms at the hotel were the best, and instead of being contented and calm, instead of resting upon his laurels and spending his ill-gotten gains, Omar continued to yawp about Leesburg, New York, a small, unknown sort of town upstate.

"No," Harmony repeated harshly, "I won't go."

The reasons for going seemed to Omar quite clear and convincing. It was his home town. His sister, his only living relation, lived there in a red brick mansion, and, in a way, it was this sister who was calling Omar back to his native heath. He did not love her. His feeling for her was one of loathing and that made the suggestion difficult for Harmony to understand.

"All right," said Omar. "I will explain it again. Hortense is my sister. She thinks I am nothing but a crook."

"So do I," said Harmony. "What else?"

"She believes I have disgraced the good old name of Gill and made it a hissing and a byword in Leesburg, where the Gills stood high. She thinks I spend my time coming out of penitentiaries, that I am always in shady deals and that my associates are the scum of the earth. . . . In this last, Hortense is correct."

He looked pointedly at Mr. Childs.

"She is therefore ashamed of her brother, and I am going back to Leesburg for two days and show my sister I am a relation to be proud of. We have money and nice clothes and this is a fine opportunity to convince Hortense I am a pillar of society and not a bum. Her full name is Hortense Rockwell."

"Rockwell?"

"Yes, she married a rich man by the name of Leander Rockwell, a globe-trotter, adventurer, collector of gems, and the friend of kings."

"And you want me along?"

"I can't be respectable alone. I need another guy to be respectable with. You can be the president of the Northwestern Broadcasting Corporation while you are in Leesburg. You wear a silk hat."

"I wear a silk hat?"

"Yes, and I will be a Wall Street person dealing in options. . . . I am an option buyer, whatever that might be. And I wear a silk hat, too."

"Well," said Harmony, who is usually the brains and leader, "if your heart is set on it, all right. I shall go with you to Leesburg for two days only."

"Thanks, Harmony. Though you are nothing but a third-class crook, you still have a heart of gold."

"And one more thing," Harmony added. "We do not stop at Hortense's home. We go to a hotel. Understand?"

"We might be invited to the house."

"I go to a hotel," the other said firmly. "I am not getting up in the middle of the night and being chased by the family police dog."

"Very well. A hotel."

Thus it was that Messrs. O. Gill and H. Childs embarked upon a fast train from New York City, bound in the end for Chicago and illegal schemes, but heading meanwhile for a stopover in the small, respectable town of Leesburg, New York. They arrived on a bright Monday morning and drove by taxicab to the Roscommon Inn, where they hired three large rooms, the rate being low.

Without delay, Omar went down the street and engaged a commodious motor car with a liveried driver. He returned to the Inn, put on his silk hat, frock coat, spats and cane, and stood ready for the social assault.

"We have," he explained, "until tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock. At that instant, our train departs for Chicago. The Pullman tickets are in my pants pocket. Let us therefore work with considerable haste."

"Where do we start?" Harmony asked.

"I will stroll out and look the situation over," said Omar. "You remain here until lunchtime, for we may be invited to eat with the Rockwells."

SO saying, Mr. Gill adjusted his silk topper, stepped into his hired barouche and rode away in state, casting about him an eye of sophisticated inquiry. He looked rich and respectable.

Left to his own amusements, and always a fidgety man, Mr. Childs strolled presently into the lobby of the Roscommon, where he entered into conversation with a Leesburg citizen, one William Whinney, owner of the garage and printing plant. Mr. Whinney was far gone in liquor.

"You got a peach," Harmony said admiringly. "Where did you get such a bun so early Monday morning?"

"I know where there is a supply of pure corn," replied the victim of drink. "I have just come from wetting my whistle in pure corn."

"And I could smear myself with two or three small shots," said Harmony, "as I have nothing to do till noon."

"That can be arranged," said Bill Whinney, "but first what I want to know is would you like to play eel with me?"

Harmony looked closely to see which was talking, the man or the bun.

"I am not acquainted with eel," he said courteously.

"All you do is bet me fifteen dollars. You look like a man that would have fifteen dollars."

"Which I saved by not playing eel with strangers," Harmony said pleasantly.

"Eel," persisted Whinney, breathing hard on Harmony, "is a nice game. You know what an eel is?"

"A fish."

"Yes. A small, elongated fish, weighing maybe two or three pounds and usually found traveling from east to west. This one is over in Joe Chick's feed store. Come on."

"Where is the pure corn?"

"Right over where the eel is."

Harmony put on his silk hat and ten minutes later the two who had been strangers walked into Joe Chick's place. Harmony said he would have about three fingers of pure corn. He had it.

"Now what about this eel?" he asked.

"There he is," said Bill, "in the aquarium."

Harmony perceived an ordinary glass box half full of water, and a swimming eel of no particular distinction. It was a small, nervous eel, weighing about two pounds and colored like the inside of a glove.

"You can lift him, can't you?" Bill asked anxiously.

"Lift him!" Harmony cried scornfully. "Why I can lift him and his aquarium and the water and also Joe Chick, using nothing but one hand, the right."

"I THOUGHT so," said Mr. Whinney. "You look like a strong man. That's why maybe I better not bet you the fifteen bucks."

"On what?" Harmony asked, pouring himself another shot, or nine fingers in all. "On what?"

"I would ordinarily bet you fifteen dollars you can't lift the eel out of the water, the bet being cash money."

"What's the catch in it?"

"No catch. You lift him out—I pay you. You don't lift him out—you pay me."

"Let's make it thirty bucks," said Harmony.

"I bet fifteen smackers," said Bill obstinately and Harmony Childs thereupon removed his silk hat, took off his frock coat and reached for the eel. . . . Twenty minutes later, the floor was covered with water, the walls were splashed, Harmony was breathing hard, his shirt was a pulp and the eel was swimming placidly in its aquarium, for it is a fact well known to ichthyologists that very few persons can remove a live and husky eel from a tank if the eel has other ideas. After thirty minutes Mr. Childs stopped trying and paid Whinney his fifteen. He then purchased the aquarium, eel and water for twenty-five dollars and caused it to be removed to the Roscommon Inn.

Omar Gill returned at noon and found his partner in the hotel lobby, offering to bet money. There was only one bet made and Harmony lost it, for even an eel can become exhausted. Wagering ten dollars, the local baggage-master seized the fast-weakening eel and removed him without difficulty. Omar surveyed the scene with disgust, seized Harmony and led him to his room.

"It's getting so you can't be left alone," he said bitterly. "Go in there and take a hot bath. Change your clothes and be sober in fifteen minutes, because we have a luncheon engagement with Hortense and her husband."

"Nobody can blame a man for getting crocked in this town," Harmony retorted. "That eel thing would be a swell racket if the eel could stand it."

"A hot bath," said Omar.

SOON after midday Mr. Childs was sober again, or partly so, and clad in fresh garments. A man took the eel away and Omar led Harmony down to the rented limousine and placed him inside. They started for the Rockwell home to begin the rehabilitation of Mr. Gill.

A servant admitted the birds of passage, took Omar's name and disappeared, and they waited, holding to their silk hats. It was Hortense who came first and Harmony looked at her as she approached. She was fifty, tall, angular, sinister, and not like Omar.

"Sister," cried Omar, "greetings. I have returned after many years. Meet Harmony Childs."

"And if you want to go on the radio, sister," Omar said, "Mr. Childs can arrange it, as he is president of the Northwestern Broadcasting Corporation of Chicago."

"Well, I must say," said Omar's sister, thawing slightly in the presence of prosperity.

"I am permanently in Wall Street," Omar explained. "I buy options."

Hortense refrained from asking him what an option was, but continued to thaw and it was apparent in a few moments that she did not intend to order her scalawag brother from the house. "My car," he said casually, "is waiting. Is there any place my chauffeur can take you?"

The conversation was interrupted by the arrival of Mr. Rockwell, who came down the stairs at a slow trot.

"Leander," said Hortense, "this is my brother, Omar, and his friend, Mr. Harmony Childs, president of the Northwestern Broadcasting Corporation of Chicago."

"Pleased," said Leander in a hearty voice. "Come right in and have lunch with us. Don't argue about it, but put down your hats and enter the dining-room."

This was stepping the speed up faster than Hortense intended, for she was still staring at Omar as though only half convinced. In Leander's mind there was no gnawing doubt and he proceeded to act the jovial host. He slapped Omar on the back and was plainly glad to meet him.

During the lunch that ensued, Leander chatted freely, Omar looked dumb, and Harmony assumed a fixed smirk. Hortense stared at Omar like one who is forced to believe something against her judgment.

"Yes," said Omar in a lull, "I may say that we have done fairly well, Harmony and self. In my Wall Street career, I have probably bought more options than any man alive today."

"You were not hit hard in the recent smash?" Leander queried.

When the meal was ended Omar again invited his sister to ride in the limousine, but she had other business. Harmony announced that his head hurt and that he craved a short hour's slumber, so he started for the Roscommon Inn.

HE went glumly into town behind the liveried chauffeur and Leander took charge of Omar and showed him through the house. It was a dwelling of many rooms, the home of a world-traveler.

"Very interesting," Omar said.

"Yes, it is," Leander agreed. "Hortense and I have traveled a bit, but we still like Leesburg. Come in here and see my curios."

"Omar," said Mr. Rockwell, "my wife makes me angry at times. Do you know she had actually prejudiced me against you?"

"Hortense always believed I was no good. I guess she's changed her mind now."

"Why, you're a fine fellow, Omar. You astonish me. It makes me ashamed of myself when I think how I formerly felt toward you."

"Thanks, Leander."

"I like you a heap, Omar; and I jolly well feel ashamed of the past. I feel like making up to you for the harsh things we have said and, dammit, I will."

"That's very kind of you, Leander. My sister has always been wrong about me."

"You are leaving tomorrow?"

"On the four o'clock flyer."

"Then, by heavens, I shall work fast. I'm going to do something for you, Omar Gill, to make up, if I can."

WHILE speaking, Mr. Rockwell removed the metal cover from a mahogany chest. He plunged into it and hauled forth a striking piece of black ivory, heavy and mysterious, a foot long and a foot high.

It was in the form of an elephant, with a queer tail which, strangely enough, was curled into a double loop. Rockwell dusted the elephant with a silk handkerchief, and held it up for Omar to see.

"There," he said, "is something for the human eye to rest upon. You are looking at something, Omar."

"An elephant?" ventured the little man, feeling he could go that far.

"Yes, but what an elephant! This, and you may never believe it, is the elephant of Queen Sadakichi."

"Well," Omar said politely, "that's quite an elephant."

"To make a long story short," said Leander, lighting a one-dollar cigar and handing Omar one, "Queen Sadakichi was the first monarch of the Ishmali line, all of whom have been dead for thousands of years. She had an emblem, same as a king has a coat of arms today. That emblem was the sacred elephant. That elephant I now hold in my hand."

"No," said Omar.

"Yes. It was dug up in the ruins of Delhi during our last visit. Passing by at the moment when a native dug it up, I bought it from him. It is seven thousand years old and worth a dollar for every year of its age."

"Seven thousand dollars," Omar murmured.

"Yes, and because I like you, Omar, you are now a half owner of the Queen's Elephant, sacred in the land of India and worth plenty of money in any land."

"Oh, no!" Omar said, aghast.

"Oh, yes. And before you move a single step, please let me show you something else that will open your eyes. Just a moment. Look here."

He drew a booklet from a case in the wall, a catalogue of art objects and antiquities, showing conditions and prices paid at Sotheby's in London, England, for everything beginning with the great Kohinoor diamond and running down to the spats worn by the Kaiser the night he took the train for Holland.

"Why, that's fifty thousand dollars," the little man said in an awed voice.

"Yes, and maybe fifty-five thousand."

"You have only one of them?"

"Only one."

"Where's the other one?"

"That," said Leander, "is what I meant when I said I was going to make up to you for the past brutality of my wife. The other Sadakichi elephant is here in Leesburg."

"No!" said Omar.

"Yes. It's in a shop on the main street, an ordinary pawnshop, run by a man named Chocker Cole."

"Would he know about this London joint and the prices in the catalogue?"

"I don't know. Any expert can tell you the value of the Sadakichi sacred elephants, because books have been written about them. What I say is, let's go down the street and maybe we can sell him this one. From now on, you're half owner."

Mr. Rockwell rang a bell and sent for a taxicab. Carrying the ancient elephant in a bath towel, the two rolled into town and pulled up before an unimpressive pawnshop.

"Don't let on," warned Leander, entering Chocker Cole's place of business. "He may not know anything."

Mr. Cole, a very fat man with blue eyes and a pugnacious nose above a more pugnacious chin, not only knew all about the ancient Sadakichi elephants of the Indies, but was coldly suspicious.

"My name is Leander Rockwell," said that worthy man.

"I know it is," replied Pawnbroker Cole. "What do you want to know about these elephants and why?"

"You are apparently aware—"

"Yes. There is one of them in the world and it belongs to me, and it's worth plenty of money."

"Would you be willing to sell it?" Leander inquired.

"Sure," said Mr. Cole, "for six thousand dollars and not a cent less."

HE thereupon produced the Sotheby index to prices and Omar examined it as though he had not seen the same thing within the half hour.

"Let us look at your elephant," he said, and Mr. Cole immediately opened his safe, and brought forth the twin to Leander's Sadakichi. It was identical.

"They think," said Mr. Cole, relenting a trifle, "that some day somebody will find the other one, but you'll never make me believe it. This is the only one there is, in spite of the catalogue."

"Let us walk outside," suggested Omar, turning to Leander. "I want to talk to you about something."

"Very good," replied Leander, and Mr. Cole stared at them suspiciously.

"Would you," Omar asked, pausing at the door, "care to buy the other twin to your elephant if it was to be had?"

"Would I!" answered Chocker Cole chuckling. "To be sure I would. But at a price where I could make some money. I'm telling you there is only one and here she is."

"Come over here in the Park," said Omar to Leander.

"NOW," said Omar excitedly, "let's look this over. Do we buy or do we sell?"

"Omar," said Rockwell smilingly, "I like you. Buy or sell, you take half the profits."

"Yes, but we only get six or seven thousand for your elephant if we sell to this Cole person, whereas we get fifty thousand in London for the pair. We will walk right back there and buy this man's elephant."

"Just as you desire, Omar."

Conference being over, they returned to the pawnshop and bought the elephant. Omar fished three thousand dollars from inner recesses and counted the bills carefully. Mr. Rockwell did likewise.

"Just make out a bill of sale, please," he directed. "Might as well have everything regular." Chocker Cole obligingly scrawled the information that he had just sold his Sadakichi elephant to Messrs. Gill and Rockwell for the sum of six thousand dollars.

"And that's that," Omar said with a smile. "Shall we tell him, Leander?"

"No harm to tell Mr. Cole."

The pawnbroker was thereupon informed that there were actually two Sadakichis in the world and Omar unwrapped the bath towel and displayed the Rockwell ivory.

"Well, I'll be damned," cried Cole. "You two are a couple of slickers. I thought there was something odd about you."

"It's just modern business," said Omar modestly.

On the way back to the Rockwell house, Leander impressed upon Omar the need for complete silence and secrecy.

"You can bet I'll say nothing," Omar cried fervently, "not even to Harmony. When do you start for England?"

"I wasn't leaving for several weeks yet," said Leander thoughtfully, "but now, perhaps I'd better go immediately. The minute I get there, I'll turn the pair in to Sotheby's and mail you your check, or would you prefer a draft?"

"Either is all right. You been very nice to me, Leander. Mail the check to the Winslow Hotel in Chicago."

Mr. Rockwell placed the twin ivory elephants in his big safe and that night Omar and Harmony were escorted by the Rockwells to a lawn fete in Leesburg, where Leander took Harmony to one side.

"Mr. Childs," he said nibbling at a piece of cake, "I am mighty glad Omar has you for a friend. I'd like to do you a trifling service."

"Well, well," said Harmony, pleased.

"Can you meet me tomorrow about ten in the morning?"

"Sure I can."

PROMPTLY at ten on Tuesday, Mr. Childs, having disposed of Omar, met Leander, who led him straight to the curio room.

Twenty minutes later Mr. Cole was wrapping up his Sadakichi elephant for the second time in two days and Harmony was wetting his thumb the better to peel off bill after bill. Bearing the two elephants out to the car, Harmony said: "You better step over to London and get that fifty thousand right away, Mr. Rockwell, because I'm going to be a little short of ready cash."

"Leave here without delay," replied Leander, writing down Harmony's address with a stub of pencil, and they drove hastily to the Rockwell home, where the Sadakichi treasures were placed within the large, black safe. Harmony hastened to the hotel and found Omar in a sulky mood.

"Where have you been all day?" the little man roared. "I want the car."

"I have been attending to a private affair, a matter of business," said Harmony. "Anyhow, we have nothing to do but catch the afternoon express."

"And make one more call on Hortense," Omar said grumpily. "She'll be sore if I leave town without saying farewell."

"I wouldn't think so. She'll be all right if she never sees you again."

"I have established myself and my reputation in this town, haven't I?"

They turned back the liveried chauffeur to the company, handed over the closed car and looked at their watches. Hortense, the sister, made a kindly gesture by sending her own car down to the hotel, Leander driving, to see if there was any last courtesy the Rockwells could administer. Leander smiled significantly at the departing guests.

"Sure, we'll go up to the house," Omar said heartily. They made a final call. It was formal. Tea was served on the closed veranda and Hortense informed her brother she was happy to see he had turned over a new leaf. She said, too, she was glad to meet the president of the Northwestern Broadcasting Company. Everyone was polite to everyone else and at three-thirty Leander said that, much as he hated to hurry anyone, they would better be getting started if they wanted the four o'clock cannonball for Chicago.

"It has been a great joy to see you, Hortense," Omar said, shaking hands with the stern woman, who unbent to say she would go with them to the railway. Leander drove them down to the station, a porter appeared, seized the bags and faded towards the train shed. "Leander," said Omar, stepping out, "I am mighty glad I met you."

"Thanks," said Leander.

"I am, too," said Harmony, looking hard at Mr. Rockwell.

"Boys," he said, getting from behind the wheel, "we bid you farewell and a happy trip to Chicago and points west. Hortense and I will depart presently for London, where certain matters will require my attention. Your visit to Leesburg has brought us both great satisfaction and I am particularly pleased. I guess you know that."

They nodded.

"And now," continued Leander, "before you go aboard yon express, let me give you this trifling train-present, a little personal gift. Do not open the package until you are aboard train, as it is a surprise and should be opened only when the train is moving westward."

He handed Omar a paper box.

"Thanks a great deal," Omar said. "Good-by, sister, and now we will trot along lest we miss the Chicago flyer."

"So long," said Harmony, and as Leander waved briskly and Hortense sat in motionless dignity on the rear seat, the soldiers of fortune hurried after the porter and their bags. A moment later, they were standing beside their section in the Pullman and the wheels began moving.

"That's all of Leesburg," said Harmony. "Thank heaven. Let us walk forward to the club car and have a good smoke."

"Yes," said Omar. "Isn't Leander a swell bozo?"

"The salt of the earth," cried Harmony, leading the way.

They staggered through two coaches and sat down in the smoking coach.

Harmony untied the strings, removed the paper layers and disclosed both of Queen Sadakichi's elephants. He said nothing for a moment, but continued to look at the black ivory pieces as though wondering. Omar's countenance turned a light shade of gray-green, and when he spoke, his voice was vibrant.

"That's a new one, ain't it?" he asked hoarsely.

"Why?" asked Harmony, turning slowly upon him. "Are you in it, too?"

"Sure. Three grand. Are you?"

"Yes, and that makes six grand. That guy is a thinker, isn't he?"

"Have you got any money?" he asked in a faltering voice.

"About forty dollars. Have you?"

"Less than that. . . . But we still have the elephants."

"Them and our health."

"What for?"

Harmony Childs did as Omar requested and was absent for ten minutes. When he returned to the smoker, Mr. Gill was in amiable conversation with the bearded traveler. He was a kindly-looking, elderly man, with a full round face and gentle eyes. He radiated a geniality that embraced mankind and Omar was saying, as Harmony passed by: "That's very interesting, Mr. Moody, and furthermore, it reminds me of the Queen Sadakichi Elephant from India. I suppose you heard about the Queen and her elephants?"

"No," said the stranger. "I'm afraid I haven't."

Omar lowered his voice slightly and Harmony could tell by the attitude of Mr. Moody that he was rather interested in what the little man was saying.

THE QUEEN'S ELEPHANTS

by Frank Condon

"LITTLE man," exclaimed Harmony Childs, standing upon a Turkey red rug in the sitting-room of an ornate suite in a famous New York hotel, and pointing with his index finger at Omar Gill, "little man, I am not going to Leesburg."

"And why?" demanded the junior partner.

"Because I would not like any town named Leesburg. I am the kind of a fellow that just naturally couldn't stand a town called Leesburg."

Harmony Childs is a tall, pleasant-featured man with a good presence, and Omar is a red-faced, excitable, runty little shad with no presence at all.

"Pooh," he said. "Don't talk nonsense. We would only have to be there two days."

"Two days, two hours, two minutes or two sesterces, I say no. Go by yourself and leave me here in New York City, a nice collection of houses some of which are not speakeasies."

The two adventurers in refined skullduggery and light brigandage argued and named each other names that would mean death except between friends. Harmony and Omar, crooked as rams' horns, with never an honest day's toil behind them, had succeeded in scouring a smart New York grafter, who thought he was scouring them, and the net profit therefrom was the sum of eight thousand dollars, which they divided evenly on the rug. They were therefore plentifully in funds. They had purchased expensive raiment. Their appearance was that of men accustomed to success. Their rooms at the hotel were the best, and instead of being contented and calm, instead of resting upon his laurels and spending his ill-gotten gains, Omar continued to yawp about Leesburg, New York, a small, unknown sort of town upstate.

The reasons for going seemed to Omar quite clear and convincing. It was his home town. His sister, his only living relation, lived there in a red brick mansion, and, in a way, it was this sister who was calling Omar back to his native heath. He did not love her. His feeling for her was one of loathing and that made the suggestion difficult for Harmony to understand.

"All right," said Omar. "I will explain it again. Hortense is my sister. She thinks I am nothing but a crook."

"So do I," said Harmony. "What else?"

"She believes I have disgraced the good old name of Gill and made it a hissing and a byword in Leesburg, where the Gills stood high. She thinks I spend my time coming out of penitentiaries, that I am always in shady deals and that my associates are the scum of the earth. . . . In this last, Hortense is correct."

He looked pointedly at Mr. Childs.

"She is therefore ashamed of her brother, and I am going back to Leesburg for two days and show my sister I am a relation to be proud of. We have money and nice clothes and this is a fine opportunity to convince Hortense I am a pillar of society and not a bum. Her full name is Hortense Rockwell."

"Rockwell?"

"Yes, she married a rich man by the name of Leander Rockwell, a globe-trotter, adventurer, collector of gems, and the friend of kings."

"And you want me along?"

"I can't be respectable alone. I need another guy to be respectable with. You can be the president of the Northwestern Broadcasting Corporation while you are in Leesburg. You wear a silk hat."

"I wear a silk hat?"

"Yes, and I will be a Wall Street person dealing in options. . . . I am an option buyer, whatever that might be. And I wear a silk hat, too."

"Well," said Harmony, who is usually the brains and leader, "if your heart is set on it, all right. I shall go with you to Leesburg for two days only."

"Thanks, Harmony. Though you are nothing but a third-class crook, you still have a heart of gold."

"And one more thing," Harmony added. "We do not stop at Hortense's home. We go to a hotel. Understand?"

"We might be invited to the house."

"I go to a hotel," the other said firmly. "I am not getting up in the middle of the night and being chased by the family police dog."

"Very well. A hotel."

Thus it was that Messrs. O. Gill and H. Childs embarked upon a fast train from New York City, bound in the end for Chicago and illegal schemes, but heading meanwhile for a stopover in the small, respectable town of Leesburg, New York. They arrived on a bright Monday morning and drove by taxicab to the Roscommon Inn, where they hired three large rooms, the rate being low.

Without delay, Omar went down the street and engaged a commodious motor car with a liveried driver. He returned to the Inn, put on his silk hat, frock coat, spats and cane, and stood ready for the social assault.

"We have," he explained, "until tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock. At that instant, our train departs for Chicago. The Pullman tickets are in my pants pocket. Let us therefore work with considerable haste."

"Where do we start?" Harmony asked.

"I will stroll out and look the situation over," said Omar. "You remain here until lunchtime, for we may be invited to eat with the Rockwells."

SO saying, Mr. Gill adjusted his silk topper, stepped into his hired barouche and rode away in state, casting about him an eye of sophisticated inquiry. He looked rich and respectable.

Left to his own amusements, and always a fidgety man, Mr. Childs strolled presently into the lobby of the Roscommon, where he entered into conversation with a Leesburg citizen, one William Whinney, owner of the garage and printing plant. Mr. Whinney was far gone in liquor.

"You got a peach," Harmony said admiringly. "Where did you get such a bun so early Monday morning?"

"I know where there is a supply of pure corn," replied the victim of drink. "I have just come from wetting my whistle in pure corn."

"And I could smear myself with two or three small shots," said Harmony, "as I have nothing to do till noon."

"That can be arranged," said Bill Whinney, "but first what I want to know is would you like to play eel with me?"

Harmony looked closely to see which was talking, the man or the bun.

"I am not acquainted with eel," he said courteously.

"All you do is bet me fifteen dollars. You look like a man that would have fifteen dollars."

"Which I saved by not playing eel with strangers," Harmony said pleasantly.

"A fish."

"Yes. A small, elongated fish, weighing maybe two or three pounds and usually found traveling from east to west. This one is over in Joe Chick's feed store. Come on."

"Where is the pure corn?"

"Right over where the eel is."

Harmony put on his silk hat and ten minutes later the two who had been strangers walked into Joe Chick's place. Harmony said he would have about three fingers of pure corn. He had it.

"Now what about this eel?" he asked.

"There he is," said Bill, "in the aquarium."

Harmony perceived an ordinary glass box half full of water, and a swimming eel of no particular distinction. It was a small, nervous eel, weighing about two pounds and colored like the inside of a glove.

"You can lift him, can't you?" Bill asked anxiously.

"Lift him!" Harmony cried scornfully. "Why I can lift him and his aquarium and the water and also Joe Chick, using nothing but one hand, the right."

"I THOUGHT so," said Mr. Whinney. "You look like a strong man. That's why maybe I better not bet you the fifteen bucks."

"On what?" Harmony asked, pouring himself another shot, or nine fingers in all. "On what?"

"I would ordinarily bet you fifteen dollars you can't lift the eel out of the water, the bet being cash money."

"What's the catch in it?"

"No catch. You lift him out—I pay you. You don't lift him out—you pay me."

"Let's make it thirty bucks," said Harmony.

"I bet fifteen smackers," said Bill obstinately and Harmony Childs thereupon removed his silk hat, took off his frock coat and reached for the eel. . . . Twenty minutes later, the floor was covered with water, the walls were splashed, Harmony was breathing hard, his shirt was a pulp and the eel was swimming placidly in its aquarium, for it is a fact well known to ichthyologists that very few persons can remove a live and husky eel from a tank if the eel has other ideas. After thirty minutes Mr. Childs stopped trying and paid Whinney his fifteen. He then purchased the aquarium, eel and water for twenty-five dollars and caused it to be removed to the Roscommon Inn.

Omar Gill returned at noon and found his partner in the hotel lobby, offering to bet money. There was only one bet made and Harmony lost it, for even an eel can become exhausted. Wagering ten dollars, the local baggage-master seized the fast-weakening eel and removed him without difficulty. Omar surveyed the scene with disgust, seized Harmony and led him to his room.

"It's getting so you can't be left alone," he said bitterly. "Go in there and take a hot bath. Change your clothes and be sober in fifteen minutes, because we have a luncheon engagement with Hortense and her husband."

"Nobody can blame a man for getting crocked in this town," Harmony retorted. "That eel thing would be a swell racket if the eel could stand it."

"A hot bath," said Omar.

SOON after midday Mr. Childs was sober again, or partly so, and clad in fresh garments. A man took the eel away and Omar led Harmony down to the rented limousine and placed him inside. They started for the Rockwell home to begin the rehabilitation of Mr. Gill.

A servant admitted the birds of passage, took Omar's name and disappeared, and they waited, holding to their silk hats. It was Hortense who came first and Harmony looked at her as she approached. She was fifty, tall, angular, sinister, and not like Omar.

"Sister," cried Omar, "greetings. I have returned after many years. Meet Harmony Childs."

"And if you want to go on the radio, sister," Omar said, "Mr. Childs can arrange it, as he is president of the Northwestern Broadcasting Corporation of Chicago."

"Well, I must say," said Omar's sister, thawing slightly in the presence of prosperity.

Hortense refrained from asking him what an option was, but continued to thaw and it was apparent in a few moments that she did not intend to order her scalawag brother from the house. "My car," he said casually, "is waiting. Is there any place my chauffeur can take you?"

The conversation was interrupted by the arrival of Mr. Rockwell, who came down the stairs at a slow trot.

"Leander," said Hortense, "this is my brother, Omar, and his friend, Mr. Harmony Childs, president of the Northwestern Broadcasting Corporation of Chicago."

"Pleased," said Leander in a hearty voice. "Come right in and have lunch with us. Don't argue about it, but put down your hats and enter the dining-room."

This was stepping the speed up faster than Hortense intended, for she was still staring at Omar as though only half convinced. In Leander's mind there was no gnawing doubt and he proceeded to act the jovial host. He slapped Omar on the back and was plainly glad to meet him.

During the lunch that ensued, Leander chatted freely, Omar looked dumb, and Harmony assumed a fixed smirk. Hortense stared at Omar like one who is forced to believe something against her judgment.

"Yes," said Omar in a lull, "I may say that we have done fairly well, Harmony and self. In my Wall Street career, I have probably bought more options than any man alive today."

"You were not hit hard in the recent smash?" Leander queried.

When the meal was ended Omar again invited his sister to ride in the limousine, but she had other business. Harmony announced that his head hurt and that he craved a short hour's slumber, so he started for the Roscommon Inn.

HE went glumly into town behind the liveried chauffeur and Leander took charge of Omar and showed him through the house. It was a dwelling of many rooms, the home of a world-traveler.

"Very interesting," Omar said.

"Yes, it is," Leander agreed. "Hortense and I have traveled a bit, but we still like Leesburg. Come in here and see my curios."

"Omar," said Mr. Rockwell, "my wife makes me angry at times. Do you know she had actually prejudiced me against you?"

"Why, you're a fine fellow, Omar. You astonish me. It makes me ashamed of myself when I think how I formerly felt toward you."

"Thanks, Leander."

"I like you a heap, Omar; and I jolly well feel ashamed of the past. I feel like making up to you for the harsh things we have said and, dammit, I will."

"That's very kind of you, Leander. My sister has always been wrong about me."

"You are leaving tomorrow?"

"On the four o'clock flyer."

"Then, by heavens, I shall work fast. I'm going to do something for you, Omar Gill, to make up, if I can."

WHILE speaking, Mr. Rockwell removed the metal cover from a mahogany chest. He plunged into it and hauled forth a striking piece of black ivory, heavy and mysterious, a foot long and a foot high.

It was in the form of an elephant, with a queer tail which, strangely enough, was curled into a double loop. Rockwell dusted the elephant with a silk handkerchief, and held it up for Omar to see.

"There," he said, "is something for the human eye to rest upon. You are looking at something, Omar."

"An elephant?" ventured the little man, feeling he could go that far.

"Yes, but what an elephant! This, and you may never believe it, is the elephant of Queen Sadakichi."

"Well," Omar said politely, "that's quite an elephant."

"To make a long story short," said Leander, lighting a one-dollar cigar and handing Omar one, "Queen Sadakichi was the first monarch of the Ishmali line, all of whom have been dead for thousands of years. She had an emblem, same as a king has a coat of arms today. That emblem was the sacred elephant. That elephant I now hold in my hand."

"No," said Omar.

"Yes. It was dug up in the ruins of Delhi during our last visit. Passing by at the moment when a native dug it up, I bought it from him. It is seven thousand years old and worth a dollar for every year of its age."

"Seven thousand dollars," Omar murmured.

"Yes, and because I like you, Omar, you are now a half owner of the Queen's Elephant, sacred in the land of India and worth plenty of money in any land."

"Oh, no!" Omar said, aghast.

"Oh, yes. And before you move a single step, please let me show you something else that will open your eyes. Just a moment. Look here."

He drew a booklet from a case in the wall, a catalogue of art objects and antiquities, showing conditions and prices paid at Sotheby's in London, England, for everything beginning with the great Kohinoor diamond and running down to the spats worn by the Kaiser the night he took the train for Holland.

"Why, that's fifty thousand dollars," the little man said in an awed voice.

"Yes, and maybe fifty-five thousand."

"You have only one of them?"

"Only one."

"Where's the other one?"

"That," said Leander, "is what I meant when I said I was going to make up to you for the past brutality of my wife. The other Sadakichi elephant is here in Leesburg."

"No!" said Omar.

"Yes. It's in a shop on the main street, an ordinary pawnshop, run by a man named Chocker Cole."

"Would he know about this London joint and the prices in the catalogue?"

"I don't know. Any expert can tell you the value of the Sadakichi sacred elephants, because books have been written about them. What I say is, let's go down the street and maybe we can sell him this one. From now on, you're half owner."

Mr. Rockwell rang a bell and sent for a taxicab. Carrying the ancient elephant in a bath towel, the two rolled into town and pulled up before an unimpressive pawnshop.

"Don't let on," warned Leander, entering Chocker Cole's place of business. "He may not know anything."

Mr. Cole, a very fat man with blue eyes and a pugnacious nose above a more pugnacious chin, not only knew all about the ancient Sadakichi elephants of the Indies, but was coldly suspicious.

"My name is Leander Rockwell," said that worthy man.

"I know it is," replied Pawnbroker Cole. "What do you want to know about these elephants and why?"

"You are apparently aware—"

"Yes. There is one of them in the world and it belongs to me, and it's worth plenty of money."

"Would you be willing to sell it?" Leander inquired.

HE thereupon produced the Sotheby index to prices and Omar examined it as though he had not seen the same thing within the half hour.

"Let us look at your elephant," he said, and Mr. Cole immediately opened his safe, and brought forth the twin to Leander's Sadakichi. It was identical.

"They think," said Mr. Cole, relenting a trifle, "that some day somebody will find the other one, but you'll never make me believe it. This is the only one there is, in spite of the catalogue."

"Let us walk outside," suggested Omar, turning to Leander. "I want to talk to you about something."

"Very good," replied Leander, and Mr. Cole stared at them suspiciously.

"Would you," Omar asked, pausing at the door, "care to buy the other twin to your elephant if it was to be had?"

"Would I!" answered Chocker Cole chuckling. "To be sure I would. But at a price where I could make some money. I'm telling you there is only one and here she is."

"Come over here in the Park," said Omar to Leander.

"NOW," said Omar excitedly, "let's look this over. Do we buy or do we sell?"

"Omar," said Rockwell smilingly, "I like you. Buy or sell, you take half the profits."

"Yes, but we only get six or seven thousand for your elephant if we sell to this Cole person, whereas we get fifty thousand in London for the pair. We will walk right back there and buy this man's elephant."

Conference being over, they returned to the pawnshop and bought the elephant. Omar fished three thousand dollars from inner recesses and counted the bills carefully. Mr. Rockwell did likewise.

"Just make out a bill of sale, please," he directed. "Might as well have everything regular." Chocker Cole obligingly scrawled the information that he had just sold his Sadakichi elephant to Messrs. Gill and Rockwell for the sum of six thousand dollars.

The pawnbroker was thereupon informed that there were actually two Sadakichis in the world and Omar unwrapped the bath towel and displayed the Rockwell ivory.

"Well, I'll be damned," cried Cole. "You two are a couple of slickers. I thought there was something odd about you."

"It's just modern business," said Omar modestly.

On the way back to the Rockwell house, Leander impressed upon Omar the need for complete silence and secrecy.

"You can bet I'll say nothing," Omar cried fervently, "not even to Harmony. When do you start for England?"

"I wasn't leaving for several weeks yet," said Leander thoughtfully, "but now, perhaps I'd better go immediately. The minute I get there, I'll turn the pair in to Sotheby's and mail you your check, or would you prefer a draft?"

"Either is all right. You been very nice to me, Leander. Mail the check to the Winslow Hotel in Chicago."

Mr. Rockwell placed the twin ivory elephants in his big safe and that night Omar and Harmony were escorted by the Rockwells to a lawn fete in Leesburg, where Leander took Harmony to one side.

"Mr. Childs," he said nibbling at a piece of cake, "I am mighty glad Omar has you for a friend. I'd like to do you a trifling service."

"Well, well," said Harmony, pleased.

"Can you meet me tomorrow about ten in the morning?"

"Sure I can."

PROMPTLY at ten on Tuesday, Mr. Childs, having disposed of Omar, met Leander, who led him straight to the curio room.

Twenty minutes later Mr. Cole was wrapping up his Sadakichi elephant for the second time in two days and Harmony was wetting his thumb the better to peel off bill after bill. Bearing the two elephants out to the car, Harmony said: "You better step over to London and get that fifty thousand right away, Mr. Rockwell, because I'm going to be a little short of ready cash."

"Leave here without delay," replied Leander, writing down Harmony's address with a stub of pencil, and they drove hastily to the Rockwell home, where the Sadakichi treasures were placed within the large, black safe. Harmony hastened to the hotel and found Omar in a sulky mood.

"Where have you been all day?" the little man roared. "I want the car."

"I have been attending to a private affair, a matter of business," said Harmony. "Anyhow, we have nothing to do but catch the afternoon express."

"And make one more call on Hortense," Omar said grumpily. "She'll be sore if I leave town without saying farewell."

"I wouldn't think so. She'll be all right if she never sees you again."

They turned back the liveried chauffeur to the company, handed over the closed car and looked at their watches. Hortense, the sister, made a kindly gesture by sending her own car down to the hotel, Leander driving, to see if there was any last courtesy the Rockwells could administer. Leander smiled significantly at the departing guests.

"Sure, we'll go up to the house," Omar said heartily. They made a final call. It was formal. Tea was served on the closed veranda and Hortense informed her brother she was happy to see he had turned over a new leaf. She said, too, she was glad to meet the president of the Northwestern Broadcasting Company. Everyone was polite to everyone else and at three-thirty Leander said that, much as he hated to hurry anyone, they would better be getting started if they wanted the four o'clock cannonball for Chicago.

"It has been a great joy to see you, Hortense," Omar said, shaking hands with the stern woman, who unbent to say she would go with them to the railway. Leander drove them down to the station, a porter appeared, seized the bags and faded towards the train shed. "Leander," said Omar, stepping out, "I am mighty glad I met you."

"Thanks," said Leander.

"I am, too," said Harmony, looking hard at Mr. Rockwell.

"Boys," he said, getting from behind the wheel, "we bid you farewell and a happy trip to Chicago and points west. Hortense and I will depart presently for London, where certain matters will require my attention. Your visit to Leesburg has brought us both great satisfaction and I am particularly pleased. I guess you know that."

They nodded.

"And now," continued Leander, "before you go aboard yon express, let me give you this trifling train-present, a little personal gift. Do not open the package until you are aboard train, as it is a surprise and should be opened only when the train is moving westward."

He handed Omar a paper box.

"Thanks a great deal," Omar said. "Good-by, sister, and now we will trot along lest we miss the Chicago flyer."

"So long," said Harmony, and as Leander waved briskly and Hortense sat in motionless dignity on the rear seat, the soldiers of fortune hurried after the porter and their bags. A moment later, they were standing beside their section in the Pullman and the wheels began moving.

"That's all of Leesburg," said Harmony. "Thank heaven. Let us walk forward to the club car and have a good smoke."

"Yes," said Omar. "Isn't Leander a swell bozo?"

"The salt of the earth," cried Harmony, leading the way.

They staggered through two coaches and sat down in the smoking coach.

Harmony untied the strings, removed the paper layers and disclosed both of Queen Sadakichi's elephants. He said nothing for a moment, but continued to look at the black ivory pieces as though wondering. Omar's countenance turned a light shade of gray-green, and when he spoke, his voice was vibrant.

"That's a new one, ain't it?" he asked hoarsely.

"Why?" asked Harmony, turning slowly upon him. "Are you in it, too?"

"Sure. Three grand. Are you?"

"Yes, and that makes six grand. That guy is a thinker, isn't he?"

"Have you got any money?" he asked in a faltering voice.

"About forty dollars. Have you?"

"Less than that. . . . But we still have the elephants."

"Them and our health."

"What for?"

Harmony Childs did as Omar requested and was absent for ten minutes. When he returned to the smoker, Mr. Gill was in amiable conversation with the bearded traveler. He was a kindly-looking, elderly man, with a full round face and gentle eyes. He radiated a geniality that embraced mankind and Omar was saying, as Harmony passed by: "That's very interesting, Mr. Moody, and furthermore, it reminds me of the Queen Sadakichi Elephant from India. I suppose you heard about the Queen and her elephants?"

"No," said the stranger. "I'm afraid I haven't."

Omar lowered his voice slightly and Harmony could tell by the attitude of Mr. Moody that he was rather interested in what the little man was saying.

When Cooking for a Crowd

Menus, Recipes and Marketing Lists Specially Planned for Community Affairs

ALL those, to whom at some time falls the responsibility of being chairman of a community or church supper or a school or college banquet, wish to make the event one that may long be remembered, as a well organized undertaking, running smoothly from beginning to end on "oiled wheels," with the food deliciously cooked, the hot food piping hot and the cold food well chilled.

An attractively served plateful of piping hot dinner set before each of fifty to two hundred guests may not faze the expert dietitian or tea room manager, but certainly presents a number of appalling problems to the housekeeper accustomed to thinking in terms of four to six servings. Yet it is the home maker—it may be any one of us, no hotel expert—who usually plans and prepares our popular church and community dinners.

Here are two menus with the recipes and quantities of food to be purchased to serve 50 people. These menus were prepared in the Institute kitchens.

FIRST MENU
Canned Grapefruit Cocktail
Chicken Pie Mashed Potatoes
Buttered String Beans
Hot rolls
Celery Sweet Gherkins
Chocolate Ice Cream Cake
Coffee

GRAPEFRUIT COCKTAIL

2 No. 10 cans or
10 No. 2 cans grapefruit sections

CHICKEN PIE

6—4 to 5 lb. fowl or chickens
2 bunches carrots
1 bunch celery
2 tablespoonfuls salt
1 dozen hard-cooked eggs
3 qt. flour, all-purpose
½ cup baking powder
2 tablespoonfuls salt
1½ cup fat
About 1 qt. milk

Cook chicken, carrots, celery and 2 tablespoonfuls salt in water to just cover, until tender. Remove chicken from the bones. Cut hard-cooked eggs in quarters and arrange with chicken and vegetables in 3 baking pans about 14½ x 9½ x 2 inches in size. Strain broth, and add sufficient milk or water to make 4 quarts. Thicken with 2 cups flour mixed to a smooth paste with 3 cups water. Pour over ingredients arranged in pans. Top with small biscuits made as follows: Sift flour, baking powder and 2 tablespoonfuls salt. Cut in fat and add milk to make a soft dough. Roll out to ½ inch thickness. Bake pie in a hot oven at 450° F. 30 minutes or until chicken is bubbling hot and biscuits browned. Serves 50.

MASHED POTATOES

(½ cup to each serving)
15 lbs. (1 peck) potatoes
3 tablespoonfuls salt
½ lb. butter or margarine
1 quart milk

BUTTERED STRING BEANS

8 lb. string beans or
2 No. 10 cans or 10 No. 2 cans

10 bunches

CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM CAKE

Sponge cake, 3 sheets 10 in. square
7 quarts bulk ice cream
3 quarts chocolate sauce

COFFEE

1½ lbs. coffee
8 quarts cold water

Use a 2½ gallon coffee pot. Place the coffee in a cheesecloth bag and tie loosely allowing for the coffee to expand as it becomes moistened. Add cold water, bring gradually to boiling point, and remove at once from heat. Let stand 10 minutes, then remove coffee bag. If you are using an urn, be sure and follow the directions which accompany it. Serves 50.

CREAM

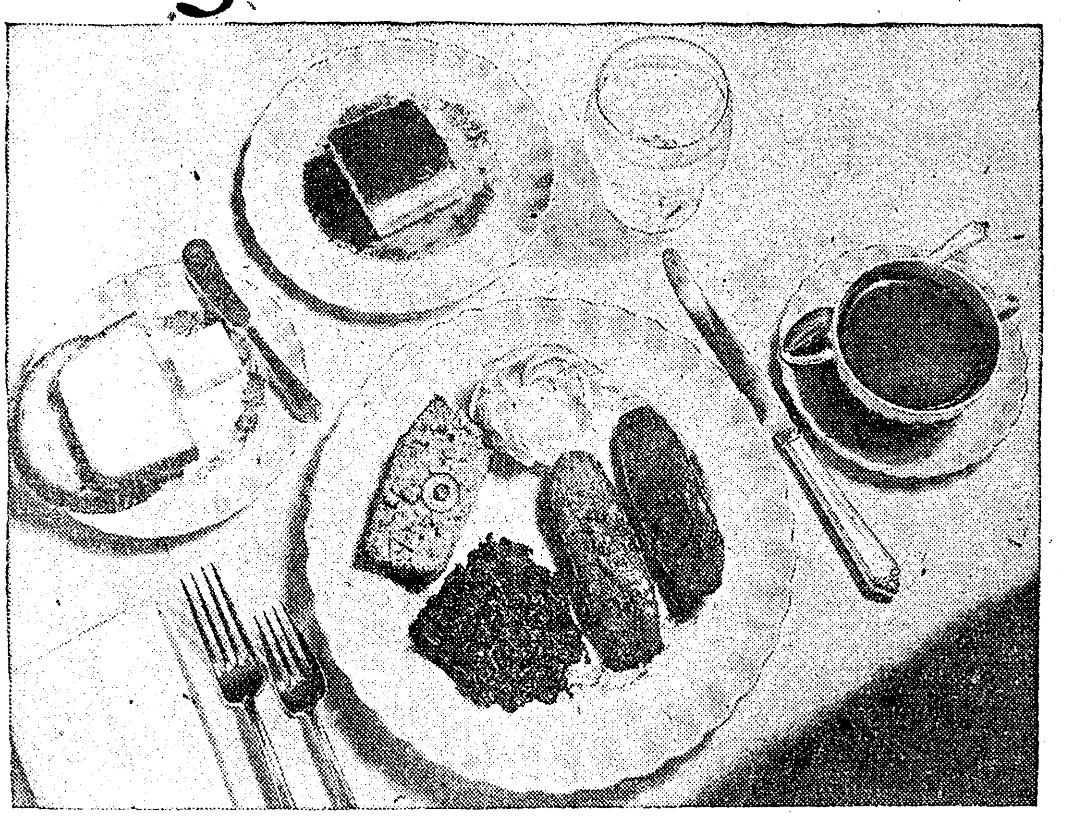
SUGAR

1 lb. loaf sugar

SECOND MENU
Ham Loaf Horseradish Sauce
Candied Sweet Potatoes
Fresh Spinach
Rye Bread White Bread
Cottage Pudding with Lemon Sauce
Coffee

HAM LOAF

7 lbs. raw ham, ground
6 lbs. raw pork, ground
2 lbs. soda crackers, finely crushed
6 eggs, beaten lightly
2 quarts milk
½ teaspoonful pepper
8 ounce bottle stuffed olives



This Sixty-Cent Luncheon Is Not Only Satisfying But Nourishing and Appetizing as Well. Other Equally Tempting Food Combinations May Be Planned Economically by Intelligent Marketing and Efficient Cookery Methods.

Combine all the ingredients in the order given with the exception of the stuffed olives. Add salt if necessary. Mix well and then press half of the mixture into 3 greased loaf pans, about 12¼ x 3½ x 3 inches in size or 6 smaller ones. Put a few stuffed olives through the center in each pan, then top with the remaining ham mixture. Bake in a moderate oven of 350° F. for 1 hour. Serve hot or cold. Six large onions minced may be added to the mixture before baking. Serves 50.

HORSERADISH SAUCE

1 pint prepared horseradish
1 pint whipping cream
2 heads lettuce

Just before serving time, whip cream until stiff and fold in the drained horseradish. Serve 1 teaspoonful in lettuce cup beside each slice of ham loaf. Serves 50.

CANDIED SWEET POTATOES

1½ lbs. brown sugar
6 cups water
1 cup butter or margarine

Steam potatoes until just tender. Cool and peel. Split in half lengthwise and arrange in shallow greased baking pans. Meanwhile boil a syrup made of brown sugar, water and butter for 5 minutes and pour over the potatoes. Bake in a hot oven of 400° F. until syrup is thick and potatoes slightly browned—about ½ hour. Serves 50.

FRESH SPINACH

12 lbs. spinach
2 tablespoonfuls salt
1 lb. butter or margarine, melted

Wash and cook spinach in a very small amount of water until just wilted. Add salt and butter. Serve at once, or keep hot over hot water or steam. Serves 50.

BREAD

2 loaves rye
3 loaves white

COTTAGE PUDDING

1 cup fat
3 cups granulated sugar
4 eggs, slightly beaten
1 tablespoonful vanilla
9 cups pastry flour (2¼ lbs.)
1/3 cup baking powder
2 teaspoonfuls salt
1 quart milk

Cream the shortening. Add the sugar gradually while beating constantly. Then add the beaten eggs and vanilla. Beat until smooth. Sift the flour, baking powder and salt and add alternately with the milk. Turn into shallow greased baking pans and bake in a moderate oven of 350° F. for 35 to 45 minutes in the hour preceding dinner. Cut in squares and serve warm with the following Lemon Sauce. Serves 50.

LEMON SAUCE

4 cups granulated sugar
2 quarts boiling water
1½ cup lemon juice
3 tablespoonfuls grated lemon rind
3 tablespoonfuls butter or margarine

Blend the cornstarch and sugar, add the water and cook 15 minutes after the mixture has thickened. Then add the lemon juice and the butter. Serves 50.

Custards for Dessert

MANY housekeepers wonder why their custard sauce curdles or their baked custards and bread puddings whey. Overcooking or too intense heat in cooking is responsible. So follow the directions carefully.

CUSTARD SAUCE

4 egg yolks or 2 whole eggs
4 tablespoonfuls sugar
¼ teaspoonful salt
2 cups hot milk
1 teaspoonful vanilla extract

Use a double boiler and be sure that water in the lower part does not boil. Beat egg yolks or eggs and add sugar and salt. Pour the hot milk on this mixture gradually and stir constantly until the sugar is dissolved. Return to the double boiler and cook, stirring constantly until the mixture coats the spoon. Remove at once, cool and add vanilla. Serve as a sauce over fresh, drained canned or cooked dried fruit, or serve over lady fingers or cake, or as a sauce for most gelatin dishes. If desired, the number of eggs may be reduced, substituting 1 teaspoonful of cornstarch for each egg yolk or 2 teaspoonfuls cornstarch for each egg. In this case pour the scalded milk over the combined sugar, salt and cornstarch and cook 25 minutes. Then pour over the beaten egg yolks or eggs, cook 1 minute longer, cool and add flavoring. Serves 6.

CARAMEL CUSTARD SAUCE

Follow the recipe for Custard Sauce with this addition. Melt an extra ¼ cup sugar in a skillet until a golden brown sirup. Add slowly to the scalded milk while stirring constantly. When smooth proceed as directed. ½ cup crushed stale macaroons may be added.

CHOCOLATE CUSTARD SAUCE

Follow the recipe for Custard Sauce, adding 1 ounce unsweetened chocolate cut in pieces to the cold milk. Scald and when the chocolate is melted, beat with egg beater until smooth. Then proceed as directed.

COFFEE CUSTARD SAUCE

Follow the recipe for Custard Sauce, adding 2 tablespoonfuls ground coffee to the milk before scalding. Then strain through fine cheesecloth and proceed as directed.

FLOATING ISLAND

Double the recipe for Custard Sauce using 2 egg yolks and 3 eggs. When cold pour into a serving dish or sherbet glasses and just before serving top with "islands" made by beating 2 egg whites until stiff adding 4 tablespoonfuls sugar gradually while beating constantly. Flavor with ¼ teaspoonful vanilla extract and drop by spoonfuls on custard. Or turn the custard into a heatproof baking dish, top with the islands of meringue and bake in a slow oven of 300° F. for 15 minutes. Serves 6.

To Wash Pillows

THE pillows should be washed in lukewarm water, and enough mild soap to make abundant suds. Five minutes should be long enough to wash them. Rinse thoroughly in two or three lukewarm waters and dry quickly.

It is more important to be sure that all the feathers are perfectly dry. It is best therefore to wash pillows on a clear windy day to hasten the drying. Shake and turn the pillows often so the feathers will dry evenly.

Feathers and ticking may be washed separately if the ticking is badly soiled. Transfer the feathers to a muslin bag by sewing the openings of the pillow and the bag together and shaking the feathers from the one into the other. Wash the feathers as directed and wash the ticking as any fast colored cotton material.

Sanitary Care of the Family Bathroom

Grownups as Well as Children Should Cooperate to Keep the Towels Folded and Nickel Bright

The Modern Chromium-Plated Fixtures Need Only Soap and Water to Make Them Sparkle. A Hasty Wiping With a Damp Cloth by the One Who Used the Basin Last, Will Keep It Always Clean and Save Mother Lots of Work.

THE bathroom in many homes is still a family room. Often it must be used by two, four, or perhaps as many as six people. The fact that every member of the house must keep and use his toothbrushes, towels, and washcloths in this room calls for definite family cooperation, for above all rooms the bathroom should be kept clean and sanitary.

It is not enough that the housekeeper or her assistant knows and follows all laws of bathroom sanitation and orderliness, for in five minutes' time one careless member of the household can undo what it has taken hours to do. Damp towels in a heap on the floor, an unwashed tub, and a spotted untidy basin are an all-too-familiar sight in many a home.

If a soft, loosely-woven cloth is kept near the basin or tub, it will encourage every member of the family to clean these fixtures after each using. If the water is soft, soapsuds and hot water are sufficient.

Where hard water is used, cleaning the bathtub or basin is another story. Water-softening compounds are excellent for removing the hard-water ring and the sticky scum that gathers in the tub or basin, and if these are used immediately after the bath, the tub can be cleaned with little effort.

The care of the toilet bowl is not difficult if it is given regular flushing with good hot soapsuds. To remove any discoloration from a neglected bowl use one of the good cleaners available for this purpose, either in powder or liquid form. With some of the liquid cleansers a brush is provided for cleaning around the top rim of the bowl. We feel that many housekeepers may not realize that a toilet bowl, having a construction that allows accumulation of deposits beneath the rim, is in need of regular care with a product that will remove all such accumulations. If a member of the family is ill, a disinfectant should be used regularly according to directions on the package. Be sure you are using a disinfectant, not merely a deodorant. A disinfectant and a germicide are the same in meaning: they are substances which destroy the germs or organisms which cause disease. A deodorant simply destroys or covers up odors, while it may have none of the powers of the disinfectant. On the other hand, there are many disinfectants which are deodorants also. Government regulations require that claims for disinfectants be specified on the label. This is your protection.

The nickeled faucets and fixtures in your bathroom need only to be washed with soapsuds and dried thoroughly. The new chromium-plated fixtures now being used so extensively for all types of plumbing fixtures need no other care than washing with soap and water, for they never tarnish.

For the tiled bathroom floor, we advise nothing more than soap and water and a fine scouring powder, which may be necessary to get off stains. The tiled wall is cleaned just as the bathtub would be. Washable wall coverings are now quite popular in bathrooms because of the interest in design and color which they give. They should be washed with warm water and a mild soap. Be sparing of water and dry thoroughly. Do not use even the finest friction cleanser on these coverings.

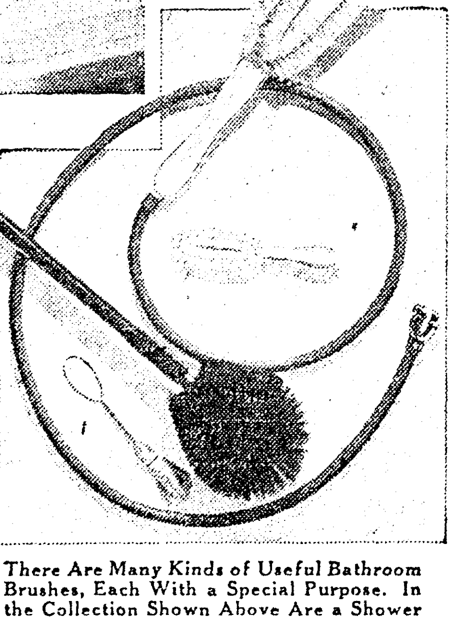

There Are Many Kinds of Useful Bathroom Brushes, Each With a Special Purpose. In the Collection Shown Above Are a Shower Brush, Two Kinds of Bowl Brushes and a Small Nail Brush.

In the bathrooms of today we find many different types of shower curtains—most of them bearing the claim of being moisture proof. All curtains should be drawn out along the rod to dry, immediately after use. This allows the air to get at the curtain and prevents any mildewing or damage to the fabric. Good shower curtains are not cheap, and they deserve this care.

The washcloth is probably more misused than any article in the bathroom. So often it is not spread out to dry, and especially on warm days, it may become objectionable instead of fresh and fragrant as it should be. New washcloths should never be used until they are laundered. The color of the cloth or the gay border may identify the owner—and never were there more attractive colors and designs in bath towels and washcloths than now. It is well to enlist family interest in rinsing washcloths after each use. In the hot, humid days of summer, washcloths need daily laundering and if possible drying in the air and sun. Loosely-woven cloths dry quickly and are splendid for summer use if one does not object to their thinness.

And now for the toothbrush. Again, the color of the handle may tell the owner. There is much to be said about the care of toothbrushes. It is a mistake to boil them, for boiling destroys and deadens the bristles and warps the handle out of shape. Nor do they need it, for every good-quality brush should have been sterilized before being sold. In choosing a brush, select one with the tufts or bristles far enough apart so that cleaning and drying are possible. In order to become really dry, a brush needs twenty-four hours, hence the importance of equipping every member of the family with two brushes. Good hygiene condemns worn-out brushes with loose, soft bristles and suggests the purchase of new ones at least every two or three months.

Cream Puffs---Eclairs

CREAM PUFFS

½ cup butter
1 cup boiling water
1 cup bread or all purpose flour
4 eggs

PLACE the butter in a saucepan with the boiling water. Place over the heat and bring to a boil.

2. Add the flour all at once and stir vigorously. Cook until the mixture is thick and smooth and pulls away from the pan stirring constantly so it will not burn.

3. Remove from the heat and cool slightly.

4. Add eggs, one at a time, beating in each thoroughly until the mixture is smooth before adding the next one. Beat mixture well. It should be very stiff.

TO SHAPE CREAM PUFFS

Drop the cream puff mixture by spoonfuls on a greased baking sheet 1½ inches apart and shape with the handle of a spoon.

TO SHAPE ECLAIRS

Put the cream puff mixture in a pastry bag and force through a round tube ½ inch in diameter for the small ones, and 1 inch for the large ones, making them 3½ to 4 inches long.

Bake either cream puffs or eclairs in a hot oven of 400° F. for 35 minutes, then remove one from the oven and test it to be sure it is not doughy in the center. If such a condition is found return to the oven and finish baking at 300° F.

FOR CREAM FILLING FOR CREAM PUFFS

1½ cups scalded milk
½ cup sugar
1/3 cup flour
⅛ teaspoonful salt
3 egg yolks
1 whole egg

Mix flour, sugar and salt together in top of double boiler, add scalded milk, stirring constantly, and cook over hot water for 15 minutes. Beat the egg yolks and the whole egg slightly and add 2 tablespoonfuls of the hot mixture stirring continually, then add the remainder of the hot mixture, return to the top of the double boiler and cook for 5 minutes longer. Then add 2 tablespoonfuls of praline mixture; 1 tablespoonful black butter (butter browned in a saucepan) and 1 teaspoonful vanilla. When cold this mixture is very stiff.

TO FILL CREAM PUFFS

Allow the cream puffs or eclairs to cool thoroughly. Cut a slit in the side of each and put the filling in with a spoon or insert the end of a pastry bag and force the filling in. Use sweetened and flavored whipped cream, custard or ice cream to fill the shells. Frost with uncooked icing or serve with crushed berries, chocolate or caramel sauce.

CAROLINES are small cream puffs filled with cream and iced with white frosting.

Disposing of Waste

THERE are now available for garbage disposal small covered waste containers that clamp to the waste pipe directly underneath the sink or at a convenient height for use. These swing in under the sink out of the way when not in use, and easily swing out to receive garbage. They have draining insets and thus reduce the water content of the garbage considerably. Some manufacturers include such a device in the sink installation. If the sink does not contain a sink strainer, one may be used to keep solid particles from getting down the drainpipe when emptying waste water in the sink. The contents of these small containers may be transferred either to a garbage can at the sink or to the larger container put out for the garbage collector. The garbage can at the sink demands regular care. Since small amounts of drained garbage are emptied into it frequently it should be conveniently opened. The foot-pedal attachment on many modern cans provides for this. If such a convenience is lacking, the can should not be placed on the floor as this means tiresome stooping over to open and close it. It should be raised to a convenient working height on a small stand at the sink.

Where incineration is the system used, housekeepers are advised to wrap all garbage in waste paper.

Clean Kitchen Range

THE modern range responds to regular daily care for the enamel finish can be kept in condition much more easily if it is wiped off every day with a cloth wrung out of clear water or a very light suds using a little fine scouring powder or friction cleaner to remove any stains. This, however, should not be done when the range is hot for the enameled finish, like glass, may crack if exposed to extremes in temperature at any one time. If anything is spilled on the range, it should be removed at once and not allowed to bake on for it will then be difficult to get off.

For cleaning and keeping free from rust those parts of the range not having an enameled finish, the tendency today is to use stove oil which may usually be procured at a hardware or department store. Use this oil when the stove is cold or when the fire is low if you are using a coal range. Rub on only a little of the oil, using a small piece of cloth or a dauber, then polish with a dry cloth or a brush. Even a neglected and badly rusted range may in time be restored by frequently cleaning it with oil, and a stove left in a summer cottage should have a coat of oil to keep it in condition. The oil, of course, need only be used once in a while, and a daily brushing will keep the stove spic and span.

If a range has been neglected and grease and dirt have accumulated, it is better to wash it with hot water and soap before using any oil. The grids may have to be removed and scrubbed with a brush in a pan of suds. If the oven lining is rusted brush it out thoroughly and clean it with stove oil.

The wicks of an oil range should be given regular care and the range should be set quite level. Do not cut the wick, wrap a piece of tissue paper around the first finger and trim off the charred wick by patting down the entire surface of it.

If the range has been neglected, take out the collar and scrape off any charred carbon which may have collected on the burner bowl or collar using a small screwdriver or knife. Then wipe off with a cloth wound over the blade of the knife. This will get most of the carbon out of the burner bowl, but small particles of it may drop down into the main feed pipe. To get rid of these particles, a small wire or a hat pin, if one can be found, should be run down through the hole which supplies the oil to the burner bowl from the feed pipe; then unscrew the nut at the end of the range farthest from the supply tank and flush the oil through it, to carry out any sediment which may have collected there. If your range has not been given proper care, the perforated chimney tube inside the burner bowl may be in bad condition. If so, it must be taken out and brushed thoroughly to get all sediment out of the perforations. It is possible that this may never have to be done.

In using an electric range with open elements care should be taken not to allow the contents of any pan to boil over on the element. If such an accident should happen, remove the burnt food carefully as soon as it is quite dry, and keep the elements brushed regularly.

Ice Cream Recipe

CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM

1 cup condensed milk
1 cup water
¼ teaspoonful vanilla
½ cup whipping cream

MELT chocolate in the top of a double-boiler. Add condensed milk and stir over boiling water for 5 minutes until mixture thickens. Add water and mix well. Chill thoroughly. Add vanilla. Whip cream to a custard-like consistency and fold into chilled mixture. Pour into freezing tray of an automatic refrigerator and freeze. After mixture has frozen to a stiff mush remove from refrigerator and scrape from sides and bottom of tray. Beat for 2 minutes with an egg beater. Smooth out and replace in freezing unit until frozen. Serves 6.

When Cooking for a Crowd

ALL those, to whom at some time falls the responsibility of being chairman of a community or church supper or a school or college banquet, wish to make the event one that may long be remembered, as a well organized undertaking, running smoothly from beginning to end on "oiled wheels," with the food deliciously cooked, the hot food piping hot and the cold food well chilled.

An attractively served plateful of piping hot dinner set before each of fifty to two hundred guests may not faze the expert dietitian or tea room manager, but certainly presents a number of appalling problems to the housekeeper accustomed to thinking in terms of four to six servings. Yet it is the home maker—it may be any one of us, no hotel expert—who usually plans and prepares our popular church and community dinners.

Here are two menus with the recipes and quantities of food to be purchased to serve 50 people. These menus were prepared in the Institute kitchens.

FIRST MENU

Canned Grapefruit Cocktail
Chicken Pie   Mashed Potatoes
Buttered String Beans
Hot rolls
Celery   Sweet Gherkins
Chocolate Ice Cream Cake
Coffee

GRAPEFRUIT COCKTAIL

2 No. 10 cans or
10 No. 2 cans grapefruit sections

CHICKEN PIE

6—4 to 5 lb. fowl or chickens
2 bunches carrots
1 bunch celery
2 tablespoonfuls salt
1 dozen hard-cooked eggs
3 qt. flour, all-purpose
½ cup baking powder
2 tablespoonfuls salt
1½ cup fat
About 1 qt. milk

Cook chicken, carrots, celery and 2 tablespoonfuls salt in water to just cover, until tender. Remove chicken from the bones. Cut hard-cooked eggs in quarters and arrange with chicken and vegetables in 3 baking pans about 14½ x 9½ x 2 inches in size. Strain broth, and add sufficient milk or water to make 4 quarts. Thicken with 2 cups flour mixed to a smooth paste with 3 cups water. Pour over ingredients arranged in pans. Top with small biscuits made as follows: Sift flour, baking powder and 2 tablespoonfuls salt. Cut in fat and add milk to make a soft dough. Roll out to ½ inch thickness. Bake pie in a hot oven at 450° F. 30 minutes or until chicken is bubbling hot and biscuits browned. Serves 50.

MASHED POTATOES

(½ cup to each serving)
15 lbs. (1 peck) potatoes
3 tablespoonfuls salt
½ lb. butter or margarine
1 quart milk

BUTTERED STRING BEANS

8 lb. string beans or
2 No. 10 cans or 10 No. 2 cans
1 tablespoonful salt
1 lb. butter or margarine

HOT ROLLS

6½ dozen rolls
1¼ lb. butter, print

PICKLES

2 quarts sweet gherkins

CELERY

CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM CAKE

Sponge cake, 3 sheets 10 in. square
7 quarts bulk ice cream
3 quarts chocolate sauce

COFFEE

1½ lbs. coffee
8 quarts cold water

Use a 2½ gallon coffee pot. Place the coffee in a cheesecloth bag and tie loosely allowing for the coffee to expand as it becomes moistened. Add cold water, bring gradually to boiling point, and remove at once from heat. Let stand 10 minutes, then remove coffee bag. If you are using an urn, be sure and follow the directions which accompany it. Serves 50.

CREAM

SUGAR

1 lb. loaf sugar

SECOND MENU

Ham Loaf   Horseradish Sauce
Candied Sweet Potatoes
Fresh Spinach
Rye Bread   White Bread
Cottage Pudding with Lemon Sauce
Coffee

HAM LOAF

7 lbs. raw ham, ground
6 lbs. raw pork, ground
2 lbs. soda crackers, finely crushed
6 eggs, beaten lightly
2 quarts milk
½ teaspoonful pepper

This Sixty-Cent Luncheon Is Not Only Satisfying But Nourishing and Appetizing as Well. Other Equally Tempting Food Combinations May Be Planned Economically by Intelligent Marketing and Efficient Cookery Methods.

Combine all the ingredients in the order given with the exception of the stuffed olives. Add salt if necessary. Mix well and then press half of the mixture into 3 greased loaf pans, about 12¼ x 3½ x 3 inches in size or 6 smaller ones. Put a few stuffed olives through the center in each pan, then top with the remaining ham mixture. Bake in a moderate oven of 350° F. for 1 hour. Serve hot or cold. Six large onions minced may be added to the mixture before baking. Serves 50.

HORSERADISH SAUCE

(1 teaspoonful to each serving)
1 pint prepared horseradish
1 pint whipping cream
2 heads lettuce

Just before serving time, whip cream until stiff and fold in the drained horseradish. Serve 1 teaspoonful in lettuce cup beside each slice of ham loaf. Serves 50.

CANDIED SWEET POTATOES

25 lbs. sweet potatoes
1½ lbs. brown sugar
6 cups water
1 cup butter or margarine

Steam potatoes until just tender. Cool and peel. Split in half lengthwise and arrange in shallow greased baking pans. Meanwhile boil a syrup made of brown sugar, water and butter for 5 minutes and pour over the potatoes. Bake in a hot oven of 400° F. until syrup is thick and potatoes slightly browned—about ½ hour. Serves 50.

FRESH SPINACH

12 lbs. spinach
2 tablespoonfuls salt
1 lb. butter or margarine, melted

Wash and cook spinach in a very small amount of water until just wilted. Add salt and butter. Serve at once, or keep hot over hot water or steam. Serves 50.

BREAD

2 loaves rye
3 loaves white

1 whole egg

Mix flour, sugar and salt together in top of double boiler, add scalded milk, stirring constantly, and cook over hot water for 15 minutes. Beat the egg yolks and the whole egg slightly and add 2 tablespoonfuls of the hot mixture stirring continually, then add the remainder of the hot mixture, return to the top of the double boiler and cook for 5 minutes longer. Then add 2 tablespoonfuls of praline mixture; 1 tablespoonful black butter (butter browned in a saucepan) and 1 teaspoonful vanilla. When cold this mixture is very stiff.

TO FILL CREAM PUFFS

Allow the cream puffs or eclairs to cool thoroughly. Cut a slit in the side of each and put the filling in with a spoon or insert the end of a pastry bag and force the filling in. Use sweetened and flavored whipped cream, custard or ice cream to fill the shells. Frost with uncooked icing or serve with crushed berries, chocolate or caramel sauce.

CAROLINES are small cream puffs filled with cream and iced with white frosting.

Clean Kitchen Range

THE modern range responds to regular daily care for the enamel finish can be kept in condition much more easily if it is wiped off every day with a cloth wrung out of clear water or a very light suds using a little fine scouring powder or friction cleaner to remove any stains. This, however, should not be done when the range is hot for the enameled finish, like glass, may crack if exposed to extremes in temperature at any one time. If anything is spilled on the range, it should be removed at once and not allowed to bake on for it will then be difficult to get off.

For cleaning and keeping free from rust those parts of the range not having an enameled finish, the tendency today is to use stove oil which may usually be procured at a hardware or department store. Use this oil when the stove is cold or when the fire is low if you are using a coal range. Rub on only a little of the oil, using a small piece of cloth or a dauber, then polish with a dry cloth or a brush. Even a neglected and badly rusted range may in time be restored by frequently cleaning it with oil, and a stove left in a summer cottage should have a coat of oil to keep it in condition. The oil, of course, need only be used once in a while, and a daily brushing will keep the stove spic and span.

If a range has been neglected and grease and dirt have accumulated, it is better to wash it with hot water and soap before using any oil. The grids may have to be removed and scrubbed with a brush in a pan of suds. If the oven lining is rusted brush it out thoroughly and clean it with stove oil.

The wicks of an oil range should be given regular care and the range should be set quite level. Do not cut the wick, wrap a piece of tissue paper around the first finger and trim off the charred wick by patting down the entire surface of it.

For the wickless type of oil range, remove the chimney and spreader, if there is one, and brush off the burners and asbestos collar.

If the range has been neglected, take out the collar and scrape off any charred carbon which may have collected on the burner bowl or collar using a small screwdriver or knife. Then wipe off with a cloth wound over the blade of the knife. This will get most of the carbon out of the burner bowl, but small particles of it may drop down into the main feed pipe. To get rid of these particles, a small wire or a hat pin, if one can be found, should be run down through the hole which supplies the oil to the burner bowl from the feed pipe; then unscrew the nut at the end of the range farthest from the supply tank and flush the oil through it, to carry out any sediment which may have collected there. If your range has not been given proper care, the perforated chimney tube inside the burner bowl may be in bad condition. If so, it must be taken out and brushed thoroughly to get all sediment out of the perforations. It is possible that this may never have to be done.

In using an electric range with open elements care should be taken not to allow the contents of any pan to boil over on the element. If such an accident should happen, remove the burnt food carefully as soon as it is quite dry, and keep the elements brushed regularly.

Ice Cream Recipe

CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM

1½ oz. unsweetened chocolate
1 cup condensed milk
1 cup water
¼ teaspoonful vanilla
½ cup whipping cream

MELT chocolate in the top of a double-boiler. Add condensed milk and stir over boiling water for 5 minutes until mixture thickens. Add water and mix well. Chill thoroughly. Add vanilla. Whip cream to a custard-like consistency and fold into chilled mixture. Pour into freezing tray of an automatic refrigerator and freeze. After mixture has frozen to a stiff mush remove from refrigerator and scrape from sides and bottom of tray. Beat for 2 minutes with an egg beater. Smooth out and replace in freezing unit until frozen. Serves 6.

Disposing of Waste

THERE are now available for garbage disposal small covered waste containers that clamp to the waste pipe directly underneath the sink or at a convenient height for use. These swing in under the sink out of the way when not in use, and easily swing out to receive garbage. They have draining insets and thus reduce the water content of the garbage considerably. Some manufacturers include such a device in the sink installation. If the sink does not contain a sink strainer, one may be used to keep solid particles from getting down the drainpipe when emptying waste water in the sink. The contents of these small containers may be transferred either to a garbage can at the sink or to the larger container put out for the garbage collector. The garbage can at the sink demands regular care. Since small amounts of drained garbage are emptied into it frequently it should be conveniently opened. The foot-pedal attachment on many modern cans provides for this. If such a convenience is lacking, the can should not be placed on the floor as this means tiresome stooping over to open and close it. It should be raised to a convenient working height on a small stand at the sink.

Where incineration is the system used, housekeepers are advised to wrap all garbage in waste paper.

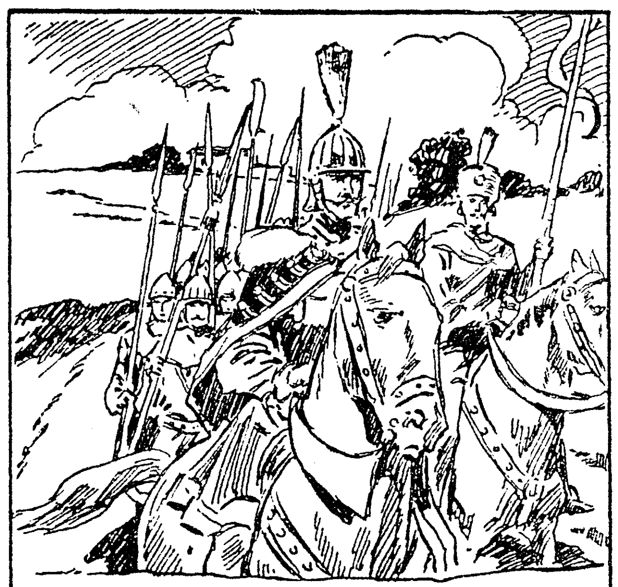
HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY -:- Hunyady János—Part II -:- By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD

KING WLADYSLAW OF HUNGARY HAD NO SOONER MADE PEACE WITH THE TURKS THAN HE BEGAN TO THINK HE HAD ACTED TOO HASTILY.

HIS GENERAL, HUNYADY JÁNOS, HAD WHIPPED THE TURKS IN FOUR GREAT BATTLES, WALLACHIA AND SERBIA HAD BEEN RECOVERED, BUT THE MOSLEMS STILL HELD A LARGE SLICE OF THE BALKAN COUNTRIES.

WLADYSLAW WAS EASILY INDUCED TO BREAK THE TRUCE AND UNDERTAKE TO COMPLETE THE TASK OF DRIVING THE TURKS OUT OF EUROPE....



HUNYADY JÁNOS PROTESTED IN VAIN AGAINST THIS TREACHERY AND AS A LOYAL SOLDIER WAS OBLIGED TO OBEY HIS KING'S COMMAND. WITH ONLY 10,000 MEN, HUNYADY IN 1444 CROSSED THE DANUBE. KING WLADYSLAW ACCOMPANIED THE EXPEDITION.....

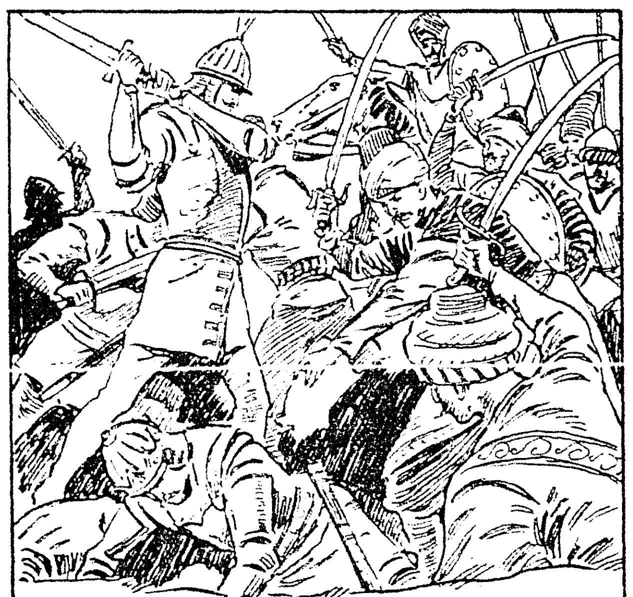
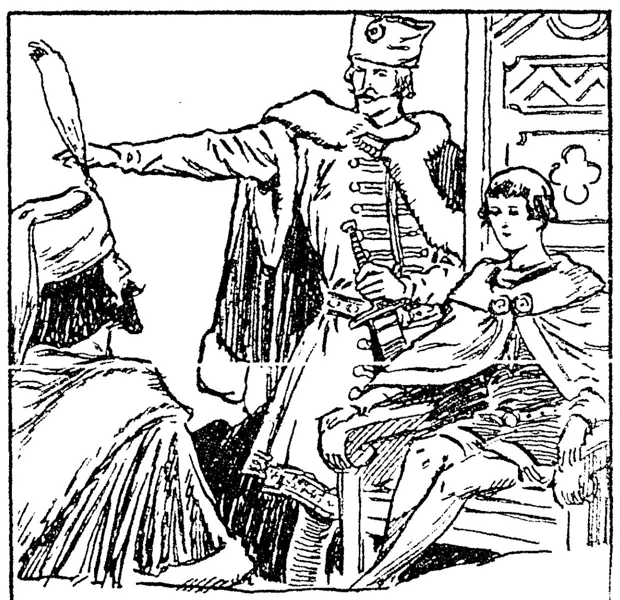
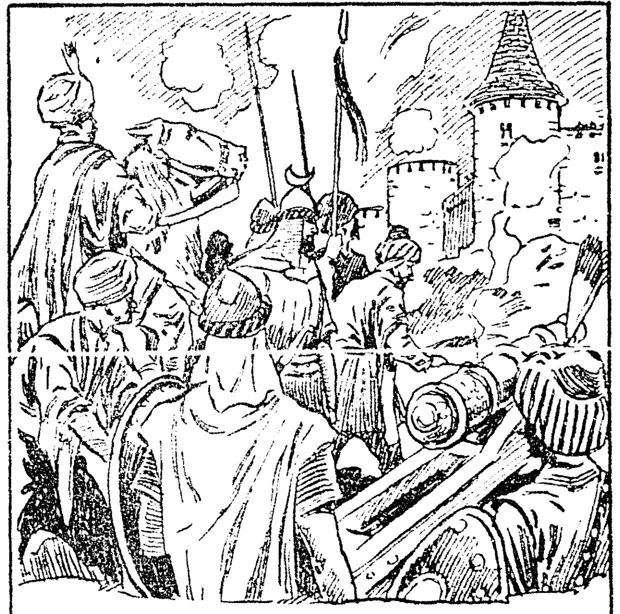
AN ARMY OF 40,000 TURKS SUDDENLY APPEARED BEFORE VARNA. THE BROKEN TREATY WAS CARRIED ON A LANCE POINT AT THEIR HEAD AS A BATTLE FLAG. THOUGH OUTNUMBERED FOUR TO ONE, HUNYADY BOLDLY ATTACKED THE MOSLEMS.



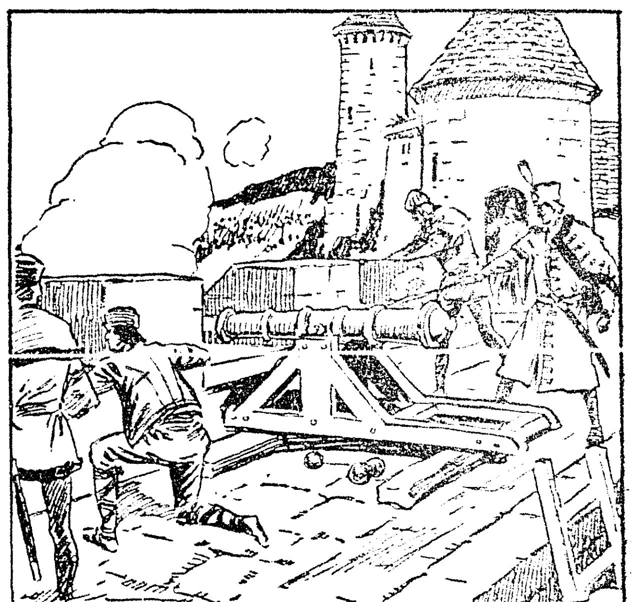
FOR ALL ITS VALOR THE LITTLE HUNGARIAN ARMY WAS ALMOST ANNIHILATED. KING WLADYSLAW AND MANY OF HIS KNIGHTS FELL BENEATH THE SCIMITARS OF THE TURKS, BUT HUNYADY ESCAPED WITH THE REMNANT OF THE ARMY.



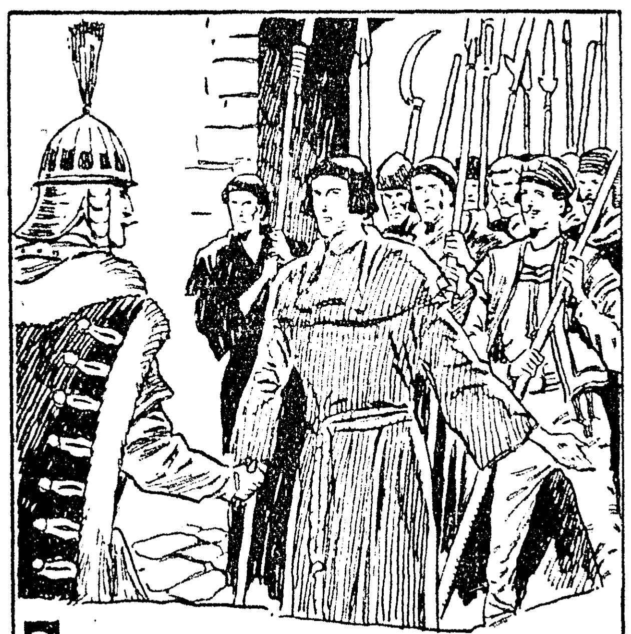
A BOY KING SUCCEEDED THE UNLUCKY WLADYSLAW, AND FOR NINE YEARS HUNYADY RULED HUNGARY AS REGENT. MEANWHILE THE TURKS HAD AGAIN OVER-RUN SERBIA.



IN 1454 THE SULTAN MUHAMMED II ADVANCED TO THE DANUBE AND ATTACKED THE SERBIAN CITY OF BELGRADE WITH 150,000 MEN AND 300 CANNON.



AT THE APPROACH OF THE TURKS HUNYADY JÁNOS, WITH A HUNGARIAN ARMY, HAD SPED TO THE AID OF THE SERBS, AND DEFENDED BELGRADE WITH DESPERATE COURAGE......



DURING THE SIEGE HUNYADY WAS JOINED BY THE MILITANT MONK, GIOVANNI DI CAPISTRANO, WHO LED A MOTLEY FORCE OF ARMED MONKS, STUDENTS AND PEASANTS TO REINFORCE THE GARRISON.

WHAT? SPEAK UP! WHAT WAS YOU MUMBELIN'?
I SIMPLY SAID, SUGAR, THAT I THOUGHT THE ONLY REASON YOU EVER MARRIED ME WAS SO YOU'D HAVE SOMEBODY TO GRUMBLE AT.
CRASH!!!
MAMIE!
YES MAM.
YOU MAY TAKE THE REST OF THE DAY OFF AND TAKE YOUR HUSBAND WITH YOU— FIX UP A NICE LUNCH AND GO HAVE A PICNIC IN THE PARK.
MY- I MUST SAY MISS SCHMALTZ IS GETTING BIG HEARTED GIVING ME A DAY OUT.
AW- SHE TOLD ME SHE'S GOT A HEADACHE AND THAT'S THE ONLY WAY SHE CAN KEEP THE HOUSE QUIET, SO SHE CAN TAKE A NAP.
WELL, I GUESS THE ONLY WAY WE CAN GET THE CORK OUT OF THIS PICKLE BOTTLE, IS TO HIRE A EXCAVATING COMPANY TO BLAST IT OUT-BRING IT OVER HERE, HELPLESS. I'LL PULL IT OUT FOR YOU.
EASY THERE, MY DEAR. GO EASY-
OH STOP GRUNTING AND PULL! PULL I SAY—
